Summary

The Council held six public scoping hearings on the chub mackerel amendment in May 2017 and solicited written comments from March 22 through May 31, 2017.

The Council received a total of 10,564 comments on the amendment. These comments included two form letters, one from the Billfish Foundation, which was submitted by 6 individuals in addition to the Billfish Foundation, and one from Pew Charitable Trusts with 10,523 signatures. Fifty-five of the comments were unique (with each form letter counting as one comment, substantive additions to the Pew form letter counting as separate comments, and identical comments provided in-person and in writing by the same individual counting as a single comment). The comments are summarized below by topic. Scoping hearing transcripts and all written comments are attached to this summary.

General management considerations

- 13 comments stated that chub mackerel management measures should be based on science.
- 10,526 comments (4 of which were unique) said the Council should consider the full range of management measures outlined in the scoping document.
- 4 comments supported the stock in the fishery management approach.
- 2 comments called for coordination with other agencies such as the National Marine Fisheries Service Atlantic highly migratory species (HMS) office and the New England, South Atlantic, and Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Councils.
- 7 comments called for greater involvement of recreational HMS fishermen in development of this amendment, especially as HMS fishermen are under-represented on the Council and on the Council's advisory panels (APs)

General ecosystem considerations

- 10,541 comments (15 of which were unique) stated that the Council should develop management measures to protect the role of chub mackerel in the ecosystem, either focusing specifically on their role as prey for HMS, or their role as prey more broadly.
- 7 comments stated that either the goals and objectives for the amendment or the purpose and need statements should explicitly state that the amendment aims to avoid negative impacts to chub mackerel predators.
- 2 comments stated that an ecosystem approach to fisheries management (EAFM) should allow for increased harvest of species that become more abundant with climate change, especially as chub mackerel will become more abundant in the Mid-Atlantic as waters continue to warm.
- One comment stated that EAFM does not require no harvest of forage species.
- In addition to the concerns specific to HMS, summarized in the next section, 3 comments expressed concern for potential negative impacts on other chub mackerel predators, especially pilot whales, but also fin whales, black sea bass, summer flounder, bluefish, bullet mackerel, and false albacore.
- 2 comments stated that the scientific literature does not clearly demonstrate that a decrease in the abundance of forage species leads to a decrease in predator abundance.

Spatial/temporal conflicts between the commercial chub mackerel fishery and recreational HMS fisheries

- 6 comments expressed concern about the potential for localized depletion of chub mackerel due to commercial fishing, which could negatively impact recreational fisheries for chub mackerel predators, especially recreational HMS fisheries.
- 10,523 comments (8 of which were unique) stated that the Council should consider spatial and/or temporal closures. Several of these comments suggested closures as a solution to conflicts between the commercial chub mackerel fishery and recreational HMS fisheries. Suggestions included a prohibition of commercial chub mackerel fishing between 50 and 100 fathoms and localized closures until white marlin have migrated out of the area.
- 6 comments opposed spatial and/or temporal closures, arguing that such closures would effectively prohibit the commercial chub mackerel fishery, would negatively impact the Illex squid fishery, and are not necessary as the commercial fishery will not negatively impact chub mackerel predators, which opportunistically prey on many species.

Catch limits (ABC and OY)

- 8 comments stated that the Council should set optimum yield (OY) at a level that accounts for the biological and economic impacts of chub mackerel harvest on HMS and HMS fisheries.
- 10 comments said that any increase in commercial chub mackerel catch is risky, especially without a scientific basis.

- 5 comments stated that options should be considered to set the acceptable biological catch (ABC) or OY at a level that would prevent catch from expanding beyond recent levels.
- One comment stated that the Council should consider setting OY to 0.
- One comment suggested that catch limits should fluctuate in response to changes in recruitment.
- 2 comments stated that the Council should base catch limits on ecological reference points such as a biomass threshold of 40% of an unfished population and a biomass target of 75% of an unfished population.

Commercial quota

- 10 comments stated that the temporary 2.86 million pound landings limit established through the Unmanaged Forage Amendment should be extended beyond three years, at least until a stock assessment is complete and the Council has a better understanding of the potential impacts of higher landings limits.
- 3 comments stated that the commercial quota should be higher than 2.86 million pounds until a biologically-based ABC is established.
- 7 comments stated that the commercial catch should be reduced or limited but did not reference a specific level of catch.
- 2 comments said that commercial harvest should be totally prohibited.
- One comment said the quota should be 222,000 pounds.

Minimum fish size

• 2 comments stated that minimum fish sizes are not needed as chub mackerel grow quickly and reach maturity at a young age. In addition, other low-trophic level species such as Atlantic mackerel, Illex and longfin squid, and butterfish are not managed with minimum fish sizes.

Commercial possession limits

- 2 comments stated that commercial possession limits are not needed.
- One comment said that commercial possession limits should be set at a level to allow for landings of incidental catch but discourage targeted fishing.

Gear restrictions

- 4 comments stated that because the chub mackerel fishery is largely a component of the Illex squid fishery (both species are targeted by the same vessels, with the same gear, and sometimes on the same trips), gear restrictions are not needed.
- The Pew Charitable Trusts form letter with 10,523 signatures called for consideration of gear restrictions.

Control date

• 10,525 comments (3 of which were unique) recommended that the Council establish a control date. One commenter saw this as a way to protect the interests of fishermen who are already involved in the fishery. Another commenter said this could be a way to prevent the fishery from expanding.

Limited access

• 2 comments said that limited access is not needed.

Recreational management measures

- 2 comments stated that a portion of the ABC should be allocated to the recreational chub mackerel fishery.
- One comment stated that a special permit should not be required to fish for chub mackerel recreationally.

Management unit

• 3 comments stated that management measures should apply beyond the Mid-Atlantic, and specifically should include New England. Two of these comments argued that if restrictive quotas were implemented and applied only to the Mid-Atlantic, then Mid-Atlantic fishermen alone would bear the burden of ensuring a sustainable fishery.

Data/analysis needs

- 10,530 comments (8 of which were unique) stated that the Council needs to thoroughly analyze the economic and biological tradeoffs of various levels of commercial chub mackerel harvest. Five of these comments said such an analysis should focus specifically on potential negative impacts to HMS fisheries.
- 7 comments stated that the Council needs to gather more data to inform management decisions.
- 8 comments called for collaborative research with commercial fishermen to gather data to inform management measures and to monitor the stock.
- 5 comments stated that the Council needs a better understanding the role of chub mackerel in the diets of HMS.
- 2 comments expressed concern that traditional stock assessments won't account for the needs of predators.
- 2 comments stated that chub mackerel landings cannot be considered a proxy for abundance as landings are influenced by many factors, including fisheries for other species such as Illex squid and Atlantic herring.
- One comment stated that landings data prior to the mid-2000s are uncertain and that chub mackerel landings may have been reported as Atlantic mackerel or mackerel unclassified.

Economic considerations

- 16 comments (11 of which were unique) stated that the economic value of recreational HMS fisheries, including HMS fishing tournaments, is much greater than the value of the commercial chub mackerel fishery.
- 5 comments said the economic importance of the commercial chub mackerel fishery was not accurately described in the scoping document, emphasizing that this fishery has economic multipliers through its various support businesses, provides year-round employment, and provides food for the U.S. and for third world countries.

Commercial fishery considerations

- 2 comments stated that chub mackerel can be an economic bailout for certain fishermen when Illex squid are not available.
- 3 comments stated that chub mackerel were available but not targeted commercially until recently because there was no market.

Other comments

- 6 comments requested that the Council analyze, and if needed, consider mitigation measures for, bycatch in the chub mackerel fishery due to spatial overlap of the fishery with other commercially and recreationally important species such as blueline and golden tilefish, black sea bass, several grouper species, and juvenile bluefin tuna.
- One comment recommended that the Council develop a policy on emerging fisheries through a separate action.
- One comment stated that chub mackerel accountability measures (AMs) should be similar to Atlantic mackerel AMs, with incidental possession limits coming into effect when 90% of the ABC is caught and no possession allowed when 100% of the ABC is caught.
- One comment stated that recreational fisheries, including tournaments, play a greater role in contributing to the overfished and overfishing status of white and blue marlin than the commercial chub mackerel fishery.

Scoping Hearing Transcripts

The Council held six public hearings on the Chub Mackerel Amendment in May 2017. Verbal comments provided at the hearings are transcribed below. Comments were transcribed verbatim to the extent practicable with minor edits for clarity.

Brooklyn, New York

May 4, 2017

Attendees: Julia Beaty (Council staff), Tony DiLernia (Council member), Zack Greenberg (Pew Charitable Trusts), Victor Vecchio (National Marine Fisheries Service)

Comments:

Zack Greenberg: Zack Greenberg. Pew Charitable Trusts. Pew will be submitting a formal comment letter before the scoping deadline that will get into some of the more details. I think just generally speaking, we would encourage the Council from the start to include scientists, include economists in the FMAT team and folks that are familiar with offshore fisheries and species like chub mackerel. Obviously, we would like to see commercial and recreational advisors included and the public along the way, whether that's members of the FMAT or the advisory panel that might be coming along with it. We would hope that through all this, by the end of the process, the Council – with whatever management measures they decide – understands how many chub mackerel are needed to be left in the ocean to sustain predators but also to sustain the fishery, and also understand the economic tradeoffs between fish as forage versus taking them out as a commodity. We do support the full range of management measures. We'll get into more detail in a comment letter. But we want to see better management of the species to avoid any area conflicts, whether that's these tournaments for billfish or others versus the commercial fishery. We also would like to see some work done to avoid localized depletion type issues if there happens to be a lot of effort developments.

Newport News, Virginia

May 15, 2017

Attendees: Julia Beaty (Council staff), Wes Blow (recreational angler), Steve Ellis (National Marine Fisheries Service), Joseph Gordon (Pew Charitable Trusts), Jacob Hiles (Virginia Beach Fishing Center), William Kelly Hoggard (Virginia Beach Anglers Club), Ken Neill (International Game Fish Association and Peninsula Salt Water Sportfishermen's Association), Rob O'Reilly (Council member), Rick Robins, Matt Seeley (Council staff)

Comments:

Kelly Hoggard: Where these fish tend to congregate, especially with the recent tightening on blueline tilefish, if a trawler comes up with 10,000 pounds of blueline tiles, what kind of action can be taken for that kind of situation? Because that's a fishery that they're really starting to tighten down on because of potential overfishing, but they could go out there and really heavily damage a fishery that's becoming a more popular sport around here. For example, with the menhaden, we have issues with striper bycatch. When you have these trawlers going for these mackerel, if they come across any blueline tilefish bycatch, what's to prevent them from throwing the fish over the side or not reporting massive bycatch of these fish?

Jake Hiles: They're in the exact same areas where the chub mackerel are, 50 fathoms all the way out along the canyons. They're caught in the day time on the bottom. It's where they're fishing for the mackerel and it's the same with the bluelines.

Kelly Hoggard: I guess my point is, I'm concerned about the bycatch and what preventative measures are taken to keep these guys honest and make sure they're not overharvesting a fishery that's by management measures seeing a decline and they're tightening down on it now.

Jake Hiles: I'm with Matador Charters in Virginia Beach. I'm here tonight speaking on behalf of several charter boat captains in Virginia Beach who are not able to make it because they're out fishing. That area where the commercial fishery for chub mackerel takes place, according to your chart there, looks like it's from just south of Norfolk Canyon to around Hudson Canyon. If there was a directed fishery open, the majority of that fishery would be around those canyons in 50 fathoms. There are a number of heavily-regulated fisheries around those canyons right now that would be impacted by trawling in that area. Aside from the damages that you're going to see to the pelagic fish, you also have several species such as black sea bass that are in that area very thick. You're going to have blueline tilefish, golden tilefish, several different species of grouper down on this end. Just the bottom fish impacts that you're going to see - they're going to trawl 50-100 fathoms with a bottom trawl during the daylight hours. That's where the chub mackerel are. They come in during the night time and spread out all over the surface so they're harder to target. But during the daytime, they get right on that edge at 50 to 100 fathoms. That's where they're going to trawl. They could be very easily wiped out by concentrating their efforts around the canyons. The charter boat captains here are very concerned. We've spent years building our fisheries around the canyons. We even have a live bait pelagic fishery. I'm not going to call it a marlin fishery because we also do catch dolphins, wahoos, and tunas. All that is dependent on chub mackerel. My concern is, these boats that you talk about, they're all from New York and Rhode Island. They don't have any concern for what happens here. They want to come down here, make their money, and go home. If they come down here and catch millions of pounds of chub mackerel, if you wipe out the chub mackerel, our pelagic fish are leaving. You just showed a chub mackerel distribution map. The entire Atlantic Ocean, just about, had chub mackerel in it. If you wipe those chub mackerel out in one particular area, the pelagics in that area are going to go elsewhere. They can go hundreds of miles a day and they will if you take the chub mackerel out of the equation. That's their primary forage fish. That's why they come to our canyons.

Kelly Hoggard: I know you talked about MRIP data being questionable, but would they make a recreational and commercial split or would they just make a total quota and close it when it goes over? I've never fished for mackerel but I know a charter captain who takes out people to go mackerel fishing in the fall when it's good. He makes good business on it. If that fishery declines, he's going to lose a portion of his income. A lot of the charter captains have lost a lot of our quota fisheries lately, about a half a dozen of them. There should be something set aside that allows recreational to target all year long so they can use it for bait or for sport or for chartering.

Jake Hiles: It depends on where you're looking.

Kelly Hoggard: If the commercial fishery is going to take, say 5 million pounds a year, there's no harm in setting aside a small portion of it to make sure the recreational fishery can take advantage of it whenever it's available.

Jake Hiles: You talk about the northern areas have chub mackerel during the summer months and the fall months - once you get into statistical area 636, that would be a year-round directed fishery. It would be a massive amount that they could catch down there. They're probably not directing their fishery down there. That's right on the edge of the Gulf Stream. There's chub mackerel there year-round.

Kelly Hoggard: It's too far to go.

Jake Hiles: The squid boats generally don't fish there because the squid get in the current and it carries them offshore. It's like 3 or 4 knots of current.

Wes Blow: Recreational fisherman. I just want you all to consider the economic impact. If they catch 5 million pounds of fish, that's a million dollars' worth of fish. The marlin fishery and tuna fishery for recreational fishermen is hundreds of millions of dollars, probably. People fish out of Ocean City for white marlin. How important that is for the economy here compared to a very small amount of money that they'll be making. I hate to see it protected for a little bit of economic impact compared to hundreds of times more value to the economy. Like Jake was saying, if the bait's gone, the fish aren't going to come here. If you drive down the street to go to a restaurant and every year for ten years it's on the right and then it's not there, you're not coming back.

Dr. Ken Neill: Representative, International Game Fish Association. President of the Peninsula Salt Water Sportfishermen's Association. Associate commissioner for the Virginia Marine Resources Commission, at least for one more month. Any increase in a commercial fishery of this forage species is a risk. You are talking about developing a fairly low-value fishery at the potential risk of very high value commercial and recreational fisheries. These fish are an important food source for all pelagics – tunas, marlins, swordfish, sailfish, wahoos, dolphins. All these fish feed on these chub mackerel. If you remove them from the ocean, you risk those fisheries, both the commercial and the recreational. Most of the guys here are talking about the recreational, but the longline fleet, they should not be happy about the idea of taking away these forage fish. The other thing is that we tend to compartmentalize everything. The Mid-Atlantic Council is to be lauded for looking at some type of protection for these forage fish. But if you're talking about allowing some type of directed fishery on one of these forage fish, then I think you should at least consult with some other agencies like Highly Migratory Species and get Margo involved and those people to get the tunas and the sharks and get the people who manage those fisheries involved because this impacts those fisheries a lot. Another factor, they mentioned the bycatch concern. We see these chub mackerel concentrated in the same places where we catch the tilefish and the bottom fish. But it's also the exact same time of year and the same area where we're out there fishing for the young of the year bluefin tuna for research purposes. This is where they're at. I don't know that we want to be encouraging a directed trawl fishery right where we've got one of our most highly regulated, at-risk fisheries with their babies right there at that time of year. One of the things you might consider is time and area closures. Keep them off the 50 fathom, 100 fathom curves in the summer and fall off the Mid-Atlantic. In general, when I see the squid trawling, they tend to be out a little ways from where the chubs are. Allowing any increase in this fishery should be done with great, great caution with a lot of thought and a lot of study. I think your temporary measures should maybe be extended until you have solid stock assessments and a better understanding of the importance of these fish in the ecosystem.

Rick Robins: I'm thinking about how complex this question is relative to the HMS issues. I'm reminded of what the Council did when we went through the process of establishing the deep sea coral protection areas. It was clear that the result of that process was going to be highly dependent on exactly and how precisely we drew lines in these areas. There were tradeoffs that were going to hinge very tightly on those decisions. In that case the staff spent extra time and went up to Montauk to talk to captains in wheelhouses to get the information they really needed to help inform the process and to get that participation and buy in from the fishermen as we went along. In this case, the complexity is with the tuna fisheries and marlin fisheries. They're really outside of the Council's wheelhouse. Those are HMS fisheries. The management along the east coast on a question like this is really disjointed, as is the science. We have science coming out of Miami. We have other fisheries science coming from Woods Hole. There's not really an effective synthesis of that in the management process. I think the Council needs to be really aware of that essentially as a gap and a liability as they move forward with this. Ideally, chub mackerel is going to be a stock in the fishery. It's most appropriately a stock in those HMS fisheries. It's that important as a forage species to billfish and tuna. It's also important to wahoo and dolphin, but those are managed by the South Atlantic Council, which adds another layer of complexity. The consequence of this action is really going to hinge around how effectively the Council considers that question in terms of its potential negative impacts on those wellestablished, highly valuable fisheries. The White Marlin Open alone, there's been an economic analysis of that tournament, it generates $16 million of economic activity in one week. It's that powerful, economically. That's one of over 100 HMS tournaments along the east coast. As the Council moves forward with this, I think it's really important to put together an effective assessment of those fisheries. So as you develop an amendment I think it ought to include a detailed analysis of the Mid-Atlantic region's fisheries for billfish and tunas, where those occur, when they occur, what the scale of them is. You can draw an area map of all the HMS tournaments along the east coast. They all have a fence. Most of them have a 100 mile fence where you can fish for them. It's the same thing whether it's a tournament or not. Those fisheries depend on having access to the fish or the target pelagic species within reach. Within reach for most species might be 60-80 miles, 40-60 miles or whatever it is. If those functioning fisheries are operating in those areas and then we propose to add on a new directed, high volume, industrial scale fishery, it's going to have an impact on those existing fisheries. Frankly, I think this issue needs to be front and center with the goals and objectives of the amendment. I think one objective of the amendment should be to avoid harm and avoid negative impacts to those existing HMS fisheries in the region. That should carry though the whole process. That should be explicitly considered when the Council considers its definition of optimum yield. You mentioned that there will be an assessment, but a traditional single-species assessment isn't going to answer that question at all, I don't think. You could go through a data-limited model exercise and come up with a black box estimate based on some life history parameters and how many fish might be caught. Right now, as we sit here today, we have no idea what the result of that process is going to be. That injects a lot of uncertainty into this situation. I think the Council needs to be aware of that. The definition of optimum yield ought to be steeped in the historical fishery and it ought to be connected back to that and it ought to avoid harm to the existing HMS fishery. Similarly, when the Council's interacting with the scientific bodies for advice, that ought to be part of that. So when the Council's interacting with contractors to develop the assessment or when you're getting advice from the SSC, that ought to be a term of reference. I think that needs to flow all the way through the process in order for the Council to be in a position to make a decision at the end of the day that takes that into consideration. I've been around this a long time. I think the expansion of this directed fishery that some are pushing for is really a perilous idea because the existing fisheries that could be negatively affected are extremely valuable. They involve thousands of permit holders. We were told as we went through the unmanaged forage action that this question with chub only affects three or four boats. But that's just a false narrative. This decision will affect the HMS fisheries that are enjoyed by many people in the region. I think all these things are important. I think it's also important because we don't know what the results will be. You might go through this process and the SSC might pick a number that's related to the historical fishery. That's a possibility coming out of a data limited modelling exercise, in which case everything is somewhat status quo. But you might go through the exercise and come up with a huge number. There's no way to know what the result will be so I think it is important for the Council to develop a full suite of measures that will mitigate those impacts in case there is an increase in quota. So I think having a season that will allow for directed fishing to occur after the white marlin have migrated, for example, would help attenuate those risks to the fishery. There are a lot of things that the Council could do. You have to prepare for the fact that we really don't know what the quota will be that will result from a data limited exercise so it's important to have a full suite of measures that will mitigate the risk. I think all these come back to the goals and objectives. This chub mackerel fishery has no historical dependency beyond what you saw in the graph. It didn't start until the Council was already underway with its management initiatives relative to unmanaged forage and the development of the Ecosystem Approach to Fishery Management Guidance Document. While the Council developed those things, the fishery suddenly sprung up as a directed fishery. We addressed that through the unmanaged forage action but I think there's not any historical dependency on it beyond that historical footprint so I think optimum yield ought to be connected to that historical fishery and it ought to take into account the risk to the existing HMS fishery.

Jake Hiles: I agree with pretty much everything Rick said. Another thing that I want to touch on is that this is talking about opening a fishery. It's very risky. If anything is mismanaged with it, it's going to have devastating effects on thousands of other fishermen. Right now, your panel is at a place where they're not looking someone in the eye and telling them they can't fish for something anymore. This isn't a fishery that exists. You're talking about someone who's trying to create a fishery that could have impacts on thousands of other people. At this point, if you rule against opening a directed fishery for chub mackerel, no one is going to be financially impacted. No one is going to lose their job. If you do open this fishery and five years up the road you decide this was a terrible mistake, you already have people who are going to be financially-dependent on that fishery. This isn't if, it's when the chub mackerel become overfished and it has effects on the other fisheries. At that point you're going to have to close down the fishery and put people out of work. I think it's a very bad idea to open this up when it can have such big impacts on people up and down our coast. You're showing hundreds of miles of coastline where these fish could be directed and it's going to have an effect on all those fisheries. The three or four boats that you're talking about that are trying to get the fishery open, they're not even from the Mid-Atlantic area, so they're going to come down here, take our resources, destroy our fisheries, and then go back to New England with nothing but negative impacts to this area. In my opinion, this is a terrible idea.

Joseph Gordon: I represent Pew Charitable Trusts. I'll speak tomorrow night in Maryland with our overall testimony. I'm glad so many people spoke tonight. I go to a lot of these hearings and a lot of times people don't speak. They feel like they shouldn't. In this case, this is the early stage that will define this. Julia showed a map of where chub mackerel are in the Mid-Atlantic. But actually, there's a cousin species that only recently was differentiated, the Pacific one. It's probably the fifth biggest fishery in the world. Chub mackerel in the Pacific is a huge fishery. So I don't think anyone should be under the illusion that this won't someday, if not in the near future, become a direct, targeted, large-scale fishery. If there's not conservation and management put in place now it could be very devastating. Whether we should have a fishery at all, I think is a question. What would be the ecological impacts? I guess part of the question you're asking now is who should be involved and how should you go about the process? I think you should look for science from all around the world about this species, anyone who has expertise in its biology. I know you mentioned it's highly variable due to the environment, but also we've talked to scientists around the world who've seen a decline due to really heavy-scale fishing. What are its relationships with other species? I think bringing in multiple APs -HMS has an AP and we have multiple APs in the Mid-Atlantic that have expertise, including the ecosystems AP. And inviting all the economists who have information about those tournaments or anything else. Trying to pull together as much information as you can into a real information-poor situation so that you have a real sense of what the impacts are going to be.

Rick Robins: Just to follow on that, we did talk about the HMS coordination and so forth, but in terms of the composition of the Council's current advisory panels, I'm not sure that there are currently members of the SMB or the ecosystems APs who have specific expertise in either the marlin fishery or the tuna fishery, either from an ecological standpoint or an economic standpoint. So supplementing, augmenting those APs as you go through this amendment process would be pretty important. I think having people who have expertise in these ecological connections to these other fisheries and economics is very important.

Joseph Gordon: I'm on two of those APs. I think the ecosystems and Squid, Mackerel Butterfish APs have expertise in the gears that will be used but not in the people that will be affected or the fish and predators.

Jake Hiles: I don't have a problem with the incidental fishery. If they're out there fishing for squid and they incidentally catch chub mackerel, I don't think they should have to throw them back. I do think there should be a very small boat limit to prevent a directed fishery for chub mackerel. But if they are catching some chub mackerel incidentally, I don't think they shouldn't be able to keep them and have to throw them back. But at the same time, I think there should be some differentiation between something that's caught incidentally and a directed fishery. I don't like the idea of coming in with a half a million pounds of chub mackerel. I think that's a terrible idea.

Dr. Ken Neill: Take your time. Get it right. I know you're under a three-year sunset thing. Extend it. I think you're better off taking your time than trying to rush to hit that three-year mark.

Ocean City, Maryland

Comments:

Howard King: Last week I was up in Woods Hole for the mackerel stock assessment, with Canadians and American scientists. They were considering Atlantic mackerel as a forage species. Of course these fish are preyed on by others. For Atlantic mackerel, they admitted that they don't differentiate the stomach contents – it's just mackerel. So they acknowledged that certainly a fair number of those would be chub mackerel. Dogfish was a magnitude of ten in terms of predation, over flounder, monkfish, even cod. But the 800-pound gorilla was marine mammals. The marine mammal consumption dwarfs finfish predation for Atlantic mackerel and presumably for chub mackerel.

David Sikorski: One thing about the APs and how you involve fishermen, especially from the private recreational and charter side of things – get them into the conversation as much as possible. Even if they don't sit in a formal role, they have valuable information. I talk to a lot of them through my role with CCA. You can get a lot of valuable input that would benefit this process. Not knowing the makeup of the Council off the top of my head, I know there are fewer guys that participate in HMS fisheries than there were, with Rick Robins leaving and Steve Linhard. Those guys were involved quite a bit. So that's just one concern for me, to make sure we have good representation outside of the general public that can provide input. I'm David Sikorski, executive director of CCA Maryland.

Monty Hawkins: I'm Monty Hawkins, Ocean City. We need to make sure that the pilot whale population has something to eat. The ecosystem ramifications of these mackerel are just fantastic. We catch sea bass, flounder, bluefish, bullet mackerel, false albacore. All of these species have small chub mackerel. Those things, when they're spawning, the little guys are all inshore and everybody's eating them. It's a hugely important part of it. I couldn't even begin to guess – the fin whales and the pilot whales have got to be eating on the things because you always find them together. That's at the time of year when pilot whales are calving. They're calving there for a reason. They're calving there because they've got a lot of good nutrition. So the ecosystem down here is just amazing. Never mind the bigeye tuna fishery which is such a phenomenal success, despite that it has no management whatsoever.

David Sikorski: Any idea of an expansion of a chub mackerel fishery in this region I see as a threat to the existing HMS fisheries. The catch that's happened recently, we don't know what impact that catch could have. Even that cap that's in place, I understand how it got there, but any increase in catch above that is one more targeted forage species in this region above and beyond squid. Your table that shows squid next to chub shows you the volume of forage that's happening. Those two boxes on your chart, they encompass the area that's accessible by the charter recreational fleet here. The guys are going to fish from the Wilmington Canyon down to Norfolk, let's say. At some point in there you kind of lose the overlap of squid and chub. Then chub, especially in the southern range, become more important forage. You can go to a place that's been really popular in the Washington Canyon, what guys call the bigeye hole. That's where there's been a really valuable bigeye fishery where people are coming to book trips because they want to catch a bigeye tuna. Same thing with yellowfins, white marlin. Everything's there. That's where, in my own personal experience, and guys I've talked to, have seen an influx of chub. It probably corresponds with that catch spike a bit. It seems to me that our charter fisheries here are always teetering on the edge of economic success or failure. Many of them are only going to go fishing if there's an abundance of predators. An abundance of predators comes from an abundance of prey. All your economic information that's in the scoping document on recreational fishing, and that includes for hire, is extremely important and that needs to be taken into consideration when calculating optimum yield and recognizing that that existing fishery is here. I do remember all the captains talking about that they don't target chub necessarily but they sometimes turn on them when squid aren't there. For them to use chub as some sort of fall back, I can understand, but increasing it as a target fishery doesn't make much sense. If you just look at the spike, 5.2 million pounds, that's a million dollar's worth of fish. If you compare that to their value in feeding all the HMS species that recreational and for hire pursue, it's not even on the same scale. That's the concern. So that goes back to having people involved in these fisheries in the process in an official manner as much as possible, as much as rules allow. And really understanding the economic impact that an increase in harvest in these areas could have on those existing fisheries. That's absolutely key to this whole process. I talked to charter captains who explained during the unmanaged forage process that you need to have good weather, your boat has to be running, you need to have people who want to book your trips. They're $1,800 to $2,800 to $3,000 trips. They're not cheap. Every good trip could mean more clients but one bad trip could mean that person's not coming back and making that expenditure again. And so, some of these captains have experienced fishing in the canyons that have high predator abundance, high marine mammal abundance, and also the squid fleet. And then coming out a day later and recognizing on the sounder that there's nothing, there's no bait there. It's probably a day that the squid fleet came in and made some catch overnight to avoid the recreational for hire guys. So now there's this void and that could mean a bad day of fishing for these guys. I know that's the way the cookie crumbles, but that's something that needs to be taken into consideration – the space and time component and how small the window is for the private and for hire guys in towns like Ocean City. And also, the tournaments and all that economic benefit. So there's that tradeoff. It's more valuable to towns like this to have that private and charter fleet to be able to fish and find those predatory species versus the million dollar landings in an entire year for the trawl fleet. Another consideration would be bycatch with the trawl fleet. If they're increasing the time that they're there to target chub mackerel, what does that do to bycatch and what species are impacted by that? That's definitely something that's of our concern. As far as recreational measures, I haven't seen anything and I try to stay up to date on what's going on. More and more I just dream about going fishing than actually going sometimes. But I don't see where there is a potential for a scale for the recreational fishery, even with the bait component, to scale up to the point where it's going to have an impact on the stock. There are some guys that catch them for live bait, but we're talking 50, 75 fish and even if that boat did that all 60 days that they may fish offshore, it's a very small amount and I would hope that no extra permits or anything like that is needed in the recreational fishery, recognizing that our fishery is data-poor in many cases. But if you just look at the scale of it, I don't think the recreational fishery is capable of targeting chub mackerel on a scale that would cause an impact. Based on my experience, the data is accurate in about where they exist. If we had an Atlantic mackerel fishery, like we used to in the '80s there might be more of an overlap, but there aren't many Atlantic mackerel here anymore and I've always known them to be more of an inshore species versus 50 fathoms and deeper like the chubs. So I don't see the chance for much overlap of recreational targeting of Atlantics and chubs.

Monty Hawkins: I think there's about 30 degrees water temperature between them, 40-80. 43 is like the magic number for Atlantic mackerel. And these chubs, I can't imagine them even in 70.

David Sikorski: That makes sense too if you look at the distribution chart that shows that they seem to exist in warmer waters where the Atlantics are in colder waters. Also, whenever you're looking at fishery that's at the extent of something's range, like it seems to be at the extent of the chub's range, I think that can kind of expand the impact it can have on a forage species. All those perfect things have to come together for a successful fishing trip out of a place like Ocean City. So if we're benefitting from an increase in chub, that's great. But starting a directed fishery and increasing that catch above what has happened historically is dangerous and is definitely a concern. I'll have a letter too.

Bud Humelsine: I'm a member of CCA Maryland. I was wondering what kind of impact is bycatch on the fishery and is there a way to regulate bycatch? I'm not an expert on that kind of stuff. But if the squid fishery gets them the most...

David Sikorski: In my understanding, and this is obviously not official, they're catching chub mackerel as a non-targeted species in the squid fishery, and that would be bycatch, essentially. They're using a bottom trawl, targeting squid, and they're catching some chub mackerel in certain areas. But there are also other species that are caught in trawls just because of the nature of what they do. It's being dragged just above the bottom.

Joseph Gordon: I'm manager for the U.S. Oceans Northeast for Pew Charitable Trusts. Also a Maryland resident and CCA member. I'm on the Mid-Atlantic's advisory panel for ecosystems and ocean planning and also for squid, mackerel, and butterfish. I'll keep my comments brief. We'll submit a comment letter. I think a lot of times in the environment right now it's easy to take things for granted. When there are many threats, to not look at the healthy components of the ecosystem. I think the Council took a lot of forward-thinking actions, like deep sea corals and unmanaged forage species, and said let's take a thoughtful approach to the resources we have that aren't damaged yet. Dave likes to describe it as not chasing the snowball downhill. We've seen that in a lot of fisheries. As the Unmanaged Forage Amendment was being developed we figured out that chub mackerel is an existing fishery. They are targeted and it increased so I think the Council acted wisely to immediately put a cap. And we thought it was the right thing to do that if you're catching millions of pounds of any species, to manage it under the Magnuson Act.

So initiating this amendment was a really good, important step in that direction. This is the scoping stage so I think there's three important pieces to look at. One is, what is the biology of this species? This is the Atlantic side, but a cousin species, Scomber japonicus, it's almost identical, exists on the Pacific side. All together it's one of the biggest fisheries in the world and it's been for quite a long time. It has a long catch history. I think we might be able to look at the experts in other nations, the experts in other fisheries who could look at catch over time. To see if there's any evidence of fishing pressure affecting those populations. I think a global search for scientists with knowledge of the biology of this species and the impacts of fishing would be excellent. The second question is what's the effect to the ecosystem and to other fisheries if you take them out? I think that was a central question in the Unmanaged Forage Amendment. Here we're in a situation that I think the Unmanaged Forage Amendment was intended to preceed. The question is, if we're going to start a new fishery, what is the impact on every other fishery that this Council and others manage? So to the extent that we can figure out the diet data – and I think the problem we're going to run into is it's a deep ocean, offshore species. They're probably not caught in the trawl survey, they're very fast. Which is why not many of the large-scale gears are targeting them. And I know the stock assessment will look at this, but how do you actually get a good sense of what eats them? What will be the impact of taking more of them out of the ocean? And so I think to the extent that we can bring in HMS and fishermen from Ocean City to bring in data from their tournaments - we have data from tournaments over time and their catch levels. We have, potentially, data about what those fish were eating. Anything we can get. I think this is the time to do that. It will put us in a better position. The last piece of it is if we want to have a new, large-scale, small-mesh bottom trawl fishery in the Mid-Atlantic, what would that mean and how would it be regulated? Because small-mesh bottom trawls have high bycatch. Squid is probably 40% bycatch. So we're looking both at bycatch of pelagic predators, but also benthic creatures, whether it's black sea bass or other species that can be caught on the bottom. So the question is, what would be caught and how would we know? What would slippage be, for example? We've looked at that for river herring and shad in similar fisheries. We're now in a situation where the Council is probably going to have 10% or less observer coverage on a lot of these large vessels and won't be able to take industry funding so we're going to be in a data-poor situation. So the question is going to be, do you want to take the risk of allowing a new largescale fishery? If so, how do you want to approach it? I think looking at, for this particular situation, what's sustainable, what is the impact of any increase in catch on everything else and on the ecology of the system? And then, how could you actually functionally manage a fishery that's a deep ocean fishery, and a new one in this area at this time?

Howard King: To David and Joseph, what were you thinking when you said no expansion of the fishery?

David Sikorski: I think a recent average. If I remember correctly, I probably asked for a lower cap than what was placed. Up until this point, I haven't seen a negative impact of harvest on the HMS fisheries. But because it's a relatively new thing, these higher-level landings, I don't know how long it's going to take until there's some negative impact. At that point, is it too late? So knowing the abundance of chub mackerel that exists in the world and trying to have a stock assessment of them here...It's the complexity in the ecosystem approach to fisheries management because if we look at it as a single species, yeah, we can find tons of chub mackerel. But it's really that policy decision as to how much is an acceptable level based on current activities. I don't think that the squid fleet is reliant upon it because we're not talking a lot of money. But I would say that the predators that the HMS fisheries pursue are reliant on it. There's been a series of pretty darn good years in Washington Canyon, Norfolk Canyon, that general area. The couple of trips that I've been on since about 2013, I remember seeing chub mackerel then. I know harvest can be a proxy for abundance in some cases. So those good fishing years that are happening now could be because the predators are there eating chubs and a number of other species and we're benefitting from that increased abundance right now. So increasing from what's recently been caught seems dangerous.

Joseph Gordon: We haven't taken a position about whether there should be an increase or not. It's about how you approach it. It's not a fishery, there's no one who's invested in gear specifically for it. There's an established global market, but this is why it's such an important, precedent-setting action. This is the first in a very long time that's considered a new large-scale fishery on a forage species that hadn't been fished before. So in some sense, it's a test of the concept that the Council came up with for unmanaged forage. If you don't have that existing infrastructure yet, but you do have an abundance that could potentially support a large-scale fishery like that, should it? And if so, what should be the appropriate considerations? And what I've heard at both the two hearings is there are many people that do depend on it for the other species that are its predators. So you're not going into a new space. You're not going into a conceptual, as we often approach fisheries in the past of what's the amount of maximum sustainable yield in a single-species context. Now we have to think of who are the other fishermen? What are the ecological tradeoffs? From my position and Pew's position, at this point, I think let's gather the information and go through what we talked about with unmanaged forage. What would be the impact? What would it look like? I don't think the Council should go in immediately assuming we're going to have a new fishery. I think that's something that has to be considered.

Comments:

Jeff Kaelin: I'm government relations for Lund's. We're a vertically-integrated, family-owned fishing company established here in Cape May in 1954. We support the Council developing a management plan for the chub mackerel fishery rather than designating it an ecosystem component species. We recommend that the management of the chub fishery be considered as part of the Illex FMP due to the spatial and temporal overlap of chub mackerel availability and the bottom trawl Illex squid fishery, as stated in the scoping document. This is an opportunistic fishery with an inverse correlation between Illex and chub mackerel catches, as the document tells us. We urge the Council to get to the SSC as soon as possible in order to create the foundation for reasonable sustainable fishery into the future. These comments are draft. I'll write something up before the 31st. We continue to oppose the Council's establishment of a minimal

2.86 million pound limit on chub catches in the region as part of the Forage Amendment. In our comments on that amendment, we're going to encourage NMFS again to implement an interim harvest of at least 5.2 million pounds, which is equal to 2013 reported catch, in order to reduce the potential for discards until the SSC can establish a reasonable, biologically-based TAC as part of this process. There's no evidence that catches at this level are likely to negatively impact the stock. We agree with the language in the scoping document that describes the vast extent of this resource. Which is why we continue to object to the low interim quota established by the Council as part of the Forage Amendment. We think about the squid fishery, we're using average catch or historic high catches as a proxy for an OFL without any obvious impact on the stock. We think the species should represent an emerging fishery in this region as a result of warming ocean temperatures and can be considered an opportunity for local fishermen and dealers in the summer months as it's likely they'll become a regularly encountered species as warming continues. Vessels and processors here depend upon a great number of fisheries in order to sustain year-round operations. In this county, fishing is one of the few year-round employment opportunities. Each species we encounter, land, and process, including this emerging resource, represents an important part of our ability to support our plant workers, office workers, boat crews, their families, and so forth throughout the year. The scoping document seems to lay out a scenario where the low-value chub mackerel resource – the 19 cent price is mentioned with no multipliers on that ex-vessel price – is in conflict with higher value recreational billfish fisheries with its $96 million in total economic output cited. We think that's kind of an unfair way of looking at this fishery. It seems to indicate that we should leave the cheaper fish in the water to benefit the billfish fisheries, which we don't agree with. Notwithstanding the fact that some of the billfish resources like the white marlin may be harvested, we think it wrong for the Council to consider removing the opportunity to for commercial fishermen to harvest an emerging fishery resource and to create coastal jobs through conservative forage fish policies that don't provide equal access for all human predators in the ecosystem. If chub were the only pelagic resource available to the billfish recreational angler, that'd be one thing, but we know that there are thousands of metric tons of other species like menhaden, butterfish, scup, squid, and herrings that also swim through these offshore canyons providing other foraging opportunities for these opportunistic feeders. Billfish tournaments are a hobby while we're in the business of feeding people and providing bait for other food fisheries around the United States. A recent evaluation of forage fish management approaches for a range of U.S. fisheries – the Hilborn paper, which I cite – shows that there's little evidence for a strong connection between an individual forage fish's abundance and the rate of change in abundance of their predators. We think the Council has to strike a fair balance between these competing human predators in the establishment of this FMP, as required by the Magnuson Act, National Standard 1. We also encourage you to evaluate the VIMS stomach content database to verify that indeed chub mackerel was not the only species eaten by Atlantic billfish, as the letter from the gentleman at VIMS may seem to indicate. It was mentioned on the FMAT call the other day. We think this forage conflict should be described in a more balanced way than the scoping document currently does given the political nature of this forage debate. So, relative to the required measures portion of the document, we agree, ACLs will be necessary. It's likely that a recreational and commercial allocation will occur, like in the other Mackerel, Squid, Butterfish species. But we don't understand why a potentially restrictive forage policy is discussed in the required measures portion of the document and not as part of the discretionary measures description. Forage fish management is not a required part of the Magnuson Act as far as I understand it. This makes us wary of where this process may be going.

The appropriate utilization of forage fish doesn't mean less or no catch for commercial fishermen, particularly since the Council's risk policies for all the species under management already insure that about 80% of any fishery resource available to us is currently left in the water as a result of strict fishing mortality limits, which should also be the case in the chub mackerel fishery going forward. We agree that EFH would have to be described as part of the FMP and we encourage the Council to consider the entire range of the chub mackerel distribution including New England waters as part of the management unit so that Mid-Atlantic fishermen aren't the only people required to bear the cost of establishing a sustainable chub fishery. I don't know how you're going to work that out, because I suppose you'd have to include the South Atlantic and the Gulf too. We just don't want the whole thing to be built on our backs, basically. When we say that, of course, we've got a 2.5 million pound quota. If it's spread throughout that region, it could be a negative impact on people here so I don't know how you're going to deal with that. As far as the discretionary measures listed in the document, we anticipate that permits and reporting will be required, as is the case in other fisheries. It may be premature to decide if limited access or a control date should be considered; however, until we determine the magnitude of the ABC that the SSC will eventually establish, and since there are very few boats involved in this fishery, it may be prudent for the Council to establish a control date initially as part of this process. It remains to be seen. It's also similarly impossible to make recommendations on landings limits and possession limits without knowing what the magnitude of the ABC may be. We don't expect minimum fish size restrictions would be established for chub since they mature quickly and spawn throughout the year and since minimum fish sizes aren't used to manage similar low-trophic pelagic species like Atlantic herring and Atlantic mackerel in the region. We also don't anticipate gear restrictions would be a requirement in the FMP either since chub is primarily caught incidentally in the Illex fishery and that gear hasn't changed in years. It's not a mesh size managed fishery. We don't expect seasonal or area closures will work either since the fish seem to be available in the region primarily during the warmer times of the year with 95% of the catch reported as occurring between June and October. Finally, we don't support the concept of carving out the canyons in the summer to provide exclusive access to chub mackerel for billfish participants in federal waters as is suggested in the scoping document. Finally, when this process was discussed at the April Council meeting, SSC chair John Boreman suggested a data workshop be held as the FMP development process moves ahead. We support this idea and hope it takes place in the near future. In fact, maybe a workshop like we had for mackerel would be a better place to start where we could develop some collaborative work with the industry to bring more information to the table about this resource because we don't think there's going to be much coming from the fisheries service. The fish swim too quickly for the Bigelow to catch them. We haven't looked at the data from the Bigelow, but we don't think we're going to see much there. I also wanted to mention that our company and Seafreeze ltd. in Rhode Island, who you'll hear from tomorrow night, are working with researchers through the Science Center for Marine Fisheries, which is a National Science Foundation industry/university partnership that we've invested in over the past few years. We're sampling chub mackerel catches at our plants. Last summer 1,500 samples were taken, measured, and weighed following established protocols. These data will be used to describe length/weight characteristics. Also, otoliths were collected from a large distribution of size classes, as was muscle tissue for stable isotope analysis, gonads for histology, and stomach samples for diet analysis. We'll be asking Robert Leaf from the University of Southern Mississippi, the principal investigator on this project, to summarize his work as part of our written comments to you prior to the May 31st deadline. We'll be sampling catches this summer and into the future at our plant, along with Seafreeze, in order to assist the Council in evaluating the chub resource and the potential for a sustainable fishery. One of the things that we saw with the sampling initially is a wide range of year classes, which usually indicates an opportunity for fairly significant catches. I think we may have the only biological data that exists on this resource. There's some history of chub in this region. It may not entirely be a global warming issue. We're going to be developing some additional comments next week with some industry people, trying to put together an industry perspective on this resource that's a little broader than just an emerging fishery context. We do think that that issue will probably bring more chub into the region as time goes on. The other thing that was missing, there wasn't any description of the SK project that took place a few years ago on the chub resource with the Axelsson family evaluating the ability to catch them. I thought that was something you might want to put in the document down the road.

Bud Brooks: Lund's Fisheries plant manager. I've been working at Lund's for 31 years. I appreciate you coming to Cape May to hear from us on the importance of our ability to process all the species that our fishermen bring to the dock so we can keep our people employed year-round. Each species that we catch and process, including the emerging chub mackerel resource during the summer and fall, represents an important part of our ability to keep our plant workers, boat crews, and support businesses like welders, mechanics, fuel suppliers, packaging suppliers, trucking companies, employed throughout the year. Nowadays with fishing quotas, vessels and processors rely on a great number of different fisheries to sustain year-round operations in the port of Cape May. In this county, commercial fishing is one of the few year-round employment opportunities available to our residents. Chub mackerel represents an opportunity for our fishermen who may not be able to find Illex squid on a given day to catch and land chub mackerel to help pay their boat expenses and pay their crew something for their hard work. And the billfish tournaments, they're an important part of our economy, but it is a hobby. They're not feeding people. Chub mackerel is not the only species that the marlin are eating.

William Bright: F/V Defiance and F/V Retriever. I use the chub mackerel in two different aspects. We target them sometimes and I also use them for bait on my longliner. It's kind of a shame to me that we were talked into the mackerel fishery in general and as the climate has changed – and it doesn't matter what you are, democrat or republican, you have to see the climate is changing, especially on the water if you spend any amount of time out there. As our mackerel quota has dropped, dropped, this is a species that could definitely fill the void for us. And for us to sit there and look at this and say, you're telling me on one side, even on your documents stating how they range from New England to Argentina, there's such large fluctuations in the stock, to have a minuscule quota at 1,200 tons, when they're very similar to Illex and Illex is 22,000 tons, I believe. It just makes no sense to me. Especially in a place where every million pounds of chub mackerel, this is the lower end, and this is going to people we feed not just in our country, but also in poor parts of the world. For every million pounds there's like a million and a half meals there. So we need to take this really seriously, the quota, not just for the white marlin. It's OK to catch a white marlin just to release them. So we're going to stop people from eating this fish because somebody wants to catch white marlin and release them or bring them in a tournament and throw them in a dumpster at the end? That's a little hard for me to swallow. I think we definitely need a management plan, but in this management plan we need real research with some of the people in this room. The best way to get the research is collaborative with us, like we're working with the mackerel. I don't know how else you would get real science without using us. Because the rest is just a guess.

Stephen Axelsson: F/V Drysten. I would say that we need to do collaborative research on this. Anything I'm going to say about the fishery itself is anecdotal. But the size of the schools and the fish we see, we can't put a dent in what is there. And the boats that can do it -it's not a big deal. Any Illex boat can do it. We're not going to harm the fish. They range from – and they're fast producing. But we need to get some kind of handle on what's there, I guess for you guys, to show. But I know for ourselves, we can't catch what we see. I know that for a fact. The fish size, I would say we don't need to limit it that way. They're much like mackerel and herring. We don't need to limit it that way. They are a bail out. They used to be a fish that, as an Illex fisherman, annoyed us when we came across them. It was something that we had to pick through. But when the Illex disappear, it's the only thing we have. I've been doing this since I was a kid. I haven't seen chub mackerel in the numbers that I have since 2012, 2013. And Illex took a dive. We didn't have a choice. We just went after them. I went to Wayne and I said, "Will you take these?" He said, "Let's try it. Let's see what we can do." If we hadn't had that, we would have tied up at the dock and stopped. We need this as a fishery to support my family, my crew. Everybody. When it comes to commercial, it's not just one little thing. It goes across the board. It turns into, not just one or two families, but 40 or 50. I don't think it's going to happen, but I'd like to see a higher limit than what they've set on it now. Because of that 2013 high limit - that was just, honestly a month and a half - we went for squid when we could and we left the chub mackerel alone. We could go harder, but we don't. Really, when the recreational guys are talking about the aggregations of fish that they see, they're fishing in the canyons, on the canyon walls. I'm not fishing on the canyon walls. I'm miles away from them. I see them. I'm search and destroy for what I need to get. And what I get is minuscule. It's so small. There's no way that what I'm taking, or what the entire commercial fishery could take, would affect that. There really is no threat there for our fishery harming the recreational side. The fish are going to be there. They can't complain because they follow us and troll behind us. So we're all in it. With closures, I'd say no. I wouldn't want to put in any kind of closure on an area. Because right now they're in south of the Hudson, but with everything we're seeing now, the northeast push of all fish, I wouldn't want to say, OK, between here and here it's OK to fish, but east of the Hudson, no. I don't want to do that because it might happen. It might happen 5 years from now or 10 years from now. And gear restrictions, no. You're going to catch them with a net. I don't see any kind of restriction we need there. That goes along with size.

Zack Greenberg: Pew Charitable Trusts. I think you heard from Joseph, so I'll keep my comments short. And we'll be submitting a formal letter on the record too. I just want to say that we have such a great opportunity here to get this right from the start. We can be inclusive of all the resource users, whether that's industry, recreational, and also the conservation aspect as well for forage species. I'd also hope from the start that the Council really seeks out to get input from scientists, economists – there's a lot of different economic issues from whatever side you're coming from. And make sure that these experts are part of the technical advisors for this amendment. We do support the full range of management measures, at least taking a hard look at each of them to see what is appropriate through this process. I would just hope that the Council takes the same spirit that you did when you passed the Unmanaged Forage Amendment last summer. I would just urge the Council to take a hard look at managing chub mackerel for its role in the ecosystem.

Stephen Axelsson: One more thing. The chub mackerel is caught during the Illex season. There's only a few boats that can catch them. I've caught them. They are difficult to catch. You need horsepower. You need to be able to tow fast to catch them. So the threat of many commercial boats coming into this doesn't exist because there's only a few that can do it.

William Bright: One thing you have to bear in mind is you're looking at landings. That's such a complex thing. You're thinking, OK, we had the same amount of effort. But what you don't seem to realize is it is so complicated because last year some of the boats were in New England, like my boat, which could be chasing them is chasing herring. You need enough squid there to keep the guys there looking for squid. The year's when you don't have any squid, your landings are going to be really low on the mackerel too because the boats can't go there just looking for mackerel. In 2013, that happened to be a year when there was enough Illex around and there were other boats there wanting Illex. You look at that and you say the fish are there or not there. But there are so many issues involved that you don't even see when you look at that. Like, oh we caught them in 2013, how much unit of effort? What was everybody doing? But you can't take those mackerel and put them in the same tank with Illex. Illex will eat the mackerel up. You just look at that chart and you don't take that into consideration. There's so much to consider. That's why we need the collaborative. We need to get this right. The only way to do that is collaborative with us. Because otherwise you're just a random guess.

Wayne Reichle: Another thing about that chart, back in the late '90s and 2000s, the chub mackerel have been here. We knew they were there. Like Stephen said, a lot of times they were more of a nuisance than anything. We didn't produce those fish for a multitude of reasons. Number one, we can't tank them with the squid because the ink from the squid water actually deteriorates the mackerel in the tank. Further, back then we couldn't afford to produce them and compete globally to get them to a market cheap enough, essentially. That's changed just in the past 7 or 8 years as global fishing quotas have been reduced to the extreme. In some areas there was a lot of illegal fishing. That's been stopped. So now all of a sudden, these pelagic fisheries that feed third world countries in most cases, there's more value there. So it's more valuable for us to pursue these fish. The Axelssons came to me back in 2013 and said, there's an opportunity. Let's go after them. That's what we did. We put U.S.A. chub mackerel on the board globally. And people recognize it now as a good resource. I think they want it. You look at last year's catch, the Drysten was not involved in the fishery in Cape May. The Flika was sold and didn't fish at all that summer. So the landings that you see there came from, more than likely, the two Seafreeze boats. So these charts that you're using in this analysis don't really depict the true fishery. I just ask that you guys bring us into the mix and do some more collaborative research so we can show people what's happening.

Comments:

Eric Reid: I'm general manager of Seafreeze shoreside productions in Rhode Island. I'm reasonably confident that the 2013-2016 data are probably reasonable with the two prior years. But what I'm concerned about is misreporting in all the other time series, that there was more chub mackerel landed than there was reported, whether it was reported as Atlantic mackerel or mackerel unclassified. I'm not so much worried about them being over-reported. I'm more concerned that they are substantially under-reported in the time series. Let's face it, there's not that many people in the business. The 5 million pound spike, I'm fairly confident that that's pretty accurate. But I am concerned that back in the '90s there were some fish landed that just became mackerel instead of chub mackerel. I don't know when SAFIS went into effect.

Walter Anoushian: 2004.

Eric Reid: So certainly before 2004 any landings would be suspect in my mind because you had this paper to fill out and you just called in mackerel. If it looked like a mackerel, it was mackerel. I think they were under-reported, and that's nobody's fault. There was no technical SAFIS program.

Meghan Lapp: Seafreeze ltd. We would be 100% against any seasonal closures that were mentioned as a possible management tool because that would shut down the Illex fishery. It's very clear in the presentation and the document that the Illex fishery and the chub mackerel fishery spatially and seasonally overlap so if you closed one you would close the other and that would not be good, especially for our vessels. If the Council moves forward with this amendment and the science, everything is going to have to be done collaboratively with industry and that would be an important thing.

Comments:

Meghan Lapp: Is it true that white marlin is overfished and overfishing is occurring? Since it's become a central topic, is it possible to include that information in the amendment going forward and in future presentations? Because I feel that it's a bit misleading to paint chub mackerel as an important forage fish for white marlin when the white marlin stock is overfished. It's a recreational-only fishery and tournaments, which you mentioned, in that fishery are offering prize money that is multi millions of dollars for one fish. In the Ocean City tournament recently there was a guy that won $2.8 million for one fish and it's now going to court because he failed a lie detector test. I feel that there is more that needs to be added to the document and I was wondering if maybe those issues could be raised going forward in the amendment. I would also like to say as a comment for the record that, this has been discussed as an EAFM thing and I believe that EAFM should also be used as a tool to open fisheries if climate shifts are causing more species to become more prevalent in the region. That should be acknowledged as a reason to open a fishery, if a species like chub mackerel is starting to be seen in more numbers than historically.

Dear Chris & Council Members,

As the leading billfish conservation organization, we at The Billfish Foundation (TBF) appreciate this opportunity to share our comments during the scoping process for chub mackerel management. Representing billfish and tuna anglers not only in the Mid-Atlantic region, but throughout the range of the highly migratory species, we recognize the importance of protecting chub (Tinker) mackerel and other forage fish species. I applaud the Council's earlier action to implement protections for forage fish and regret the sunset provision on chub (tinker) mackerel now requiring you to begin a new amendment process.

In light of the huge harvesting capacity of the giant commercial trawlers targeting low-dollar-value forage fish species, expanding the commercial harvest limit for that fishery would undermine the high-dollar-value recreational fisheries for billfish and tunas. Chub mackerel and other forage fish are very important to support the recreational fishing industry in the Mid-Atlantic region and beyond. Degrading the economic benefits flowing from the recreational billfish and tuna fisheries in the region, including benefits from tournaments and businesses, plus benefits from support service businesses, would be economically detrimental to the region. Excessive extraction of forage species from the ecosystem can also lead to imbalances within the system, which would add to further economic losses. If retaining the current commercial harvest rate can be achieved without generating ecologic or economic losses then you have found the right balance. Keep in mind that many billfish and tuna anglers have the economic means to go elsewhere to fish when their encounter rates with marlin and tuna drop in a region. The regional businesses do not have the means to move, so the Mid-Atlantic region would lose. A commercial fishery exists, but at the same time balance is needed to insure that the recreational fishery can continue to thrive as well.

Forage species, including chub (Tinker) mackerel, within your management jurisdiction should have benefit of input and review by advisory panels, plus science, statistical and economic analyses before any recommendations are finalized.

You have a tough job and I applaud you for implementing some protections for forage species, but now is the time to include chub (Tinker) mackerel with other forage species for longer term protections.

Thanking you,

Dr. Christopher Moore, Executive Director Mid-Atlantic Fishery Management Council 800 North State St., Dover, DE 19901

May 3, 2017

Dear Dr. Moore,

The Salty Flyrodders of New York (SFNY) was started in 1966 and has over 200 active members. Our club is actively involved in marine conservation, fisheries management and in the all-important fight for beach access. We love to fish. Period. At the unmanaged forage hearing last year, I mentioned how important chub mackerel are to our members and myself. Chub mackerel are very important forage to many species like tuna and billfish, but also spiny dogfish, summer flounder, and marine mammals and sharks. A healthy and abundant chub mackerel population is critical for many of our members.

The Mid-Atlantic Council should work with the relevant experts, including scientists and economists, as part of the suite of technical advisors for the development of this amendment. The Council should also seek out recreational and commercial fishermen. I believe this is necessary, so that the Council understands potential impacts of any increase in chub mackerel catch on the marine ecosystem as well as users of the resource. The Council should understand how many chub mackerel are needed to sustain predators at a healthy level, and the economic tradeoffs between keeping chub mackerel in the water verses allowing a directed fishery.

The health of chub mackerel's offshore predators should be looked at as well, with an eye towards the potential impacts that catching chub mackerel could have on these species. The scoping document points out that in 2011, recreational anglers spent an estimated $23 million on private boat trips targeting tunas, billfish, and sharks – all known predators of chub mackerel – in New England and the Mid-Atlantic. SFNY supports Council consideration of the full range of management measures, including gear restrictions, seasonal closures, and control dates. We worry that a significant increase in the commercial chub mackerel fishery could impact multi-million dollar offshore fisheries for predators like tuna and billfish.

When the Council passed the Unmanaged Forage Amendment last August, with regulations on chub mackerel for the first time, SFNY was very appreciative. We saw the Council take a proactive approach to conserving unmanaged forage species and the ecosystem services they provide. I urge the Council to do the same for chub mackerel and to consider the multiple users of this resource and their economic contributions when doing so.

RE: Chub Mackerel Amendment Scoping Input

Executive Director Moore:

On behalf of the members of Coastal Conservation Association Maryland (CCA MD) we are pleased to provide the following input regarding the addition of Chub Mackerel as a Stock in the Mackerel, Squid, and Butterfish Fishery Management Plan.

Chub Mackerel are an important prey species for many predators in the Mid-Atlantic region. They play an important role as forage in regional marine ecosystems, moving energy throughout the food web to the larger predators that eat them.

Many well-established recreational, charter, and tournament fisheries have been built on the pursuit of such HMS predators; specifically marlin, swordfish, tuna, dolphin fish, wahoo, and sharks. It is an abundance of species like chub mackerel, squid, and other forage in the Mid-Atlantic that acts as the foundation of such offshore HMS fisheries, which ultimately generate massive economic benefit and thousands of jobs in many coastal towns. Pilot whales are another important predator that spend much of the summer and early fall in the same areas where chub mackerel abundance is continually noted by many HMS fishermen.

Tournaments also highlight the immense economic value of largely catch and release billfish fisheries to the region. The conservation of billfish species continues to benefit to towns like Ocean City, Maryland, which is proud to host the White Marlin Open, and be considered the White Marlin Capital of the World.

HMS based recreational, charter, and commercial fisheries also provide important access for many to species that are a highly valuable food source for the nation. In contrast, the peak historical catch of the low value of chub mackerel is limited in overall value both as a food source and in overall economic benefit.

We commend the Council for the development of the Ecosystem Approach to Fisheries Management Guidance Document, and appreciate the complexity of shifting away from single species based management action.

Considering such guidance, we encourage the Council to consider and include the following elements when establishing the amendment:

- Provide for a broad range of stakeholder involvement in the amendment process by adding advisors with experience in the operation of, and economics of HMS based fisheries through appropriate advisory panels, FMAT, and SSC discussions.
- -Include the protection of existing HMS based fisheries in the goals and objectives of the amendment, and definition of Optimum Yield for the chub mackerel fishery.
- Include a comprehensive analysis of the economic impact of existing private recreational, charter, and tournament fisheries, including spatial and seasonal effort and benefit.
- Include options that would cap the chub mackerel fishery at historic levels to ensure no negative impacts to existing fisheries.
- Include risks to the existing HMS fisheries in all of the terms of reference for the management of chub mackerel, as well as impacts on other managed and unmanaged species by increased effort and bycatch.
- Ensure a comprehensive suite of management alternatives to mitigate any impacts to existing HMS based fisheries, and potential conflicts with industrial level removals of chub mackerel during periods of peak abundance of predators in the region.

We appreciate the opportunity to on this action, and urge the Council to carefully consider the existing ecological balance, and economic benefit that exists in the region, and may be impacted by an increase in chub mackerel harvest at this time.

Frank Bonanno

RE: Chub Mackerel Scoping Comments

Dear Dr. Moore

The Recreational Fishing Alliance (RFA) offers the following comments in regards to the management of chub mackerel in the Mid-Atlantic region. The RFA is not supportive of the development of a large-scale, industrialize fishery for chub mackerel. There are numerous examples from other low-value, high-volume fisheries that the ecological impacts far outweigh the economic benefits gained by a few vessels and shore-side processors. RFA is not opposed to reasonable harvest of chub mackerel but firmly believes that management needs to focus on preventing the expansion of an industrial fishery for this species.

Tinker (chub) mackerel are critically important to the marlin and tuna fisheries in the Mid-Atlantic region. The recreational, charter, and tournament fisheries for marlin and tuna generate millions of dollars of economic activity for coastal fishing communities from North Carolina through New York. The presence of tinker mackerels in the Mid-Atlantic Canyons during the summer and fall months holds marlin, tuna, and other important gamefish in the Canyons during the peak of these economically important HMS fisheries.

Any significant expansion of the chub mackerel fishery will pose a direct risk to our established and highly valuable fisheries for marlin and tuna. Directed commercial fishing for chub mackerel is an industrial-scale enterprise, in which 500,000 pounds or more may be removed from a canyon in a single trip. This volume of removals can cause significant disruptions to prey species such as tuna and marlin. Chub mackerel are low value fish commercially, with no historical economic dependence beyond the current cap, and are highly important as forage for existing HMS fisheries. The economic tradeoffs do not support expanding this low value fishery at the expense of disrupting or degrading the marlin and tuna fisheries.

As the Council moves forward with this amendment, the RFA would encourage the Council to include the following elements and processes in the amendment:

- Add advisors and members with expertise in the economics of the HMS fisheries to the appropriate advisory panels, FMAT, and Scientific and Statistical Committee.
- Include protection of the existing Mid-Atlantic marlin and tuna fisheries in the goals and objectives of the amendment and in the definition of Optimum Yield for the chub mackerel fishery.
- Include a comprehensive description and economic analysis of the existing Mid-Atlantic recreational fisheries (private, charter, and tournament) for marlin and tuna in the amendment, including seasonal and spatial fishing effort.
- Include management options that would avoid negative impacts to existing HMS fisheries, including options for Optimum Yield that would be based on capping the chub fishery at historical levels.
- Include a comprehensive suite of management alternatives that would mitigate any impacts to existing HMS fisheries and de-conflict the fisheries, including seasonal and spatial restrictions on directed fishing for chub mackerel to prevent industrial-scale removals of chub mackerel until after the billfish have migrated from the Mid-Atlantic canyons.
- Include risks to the existing HMS fisheries in all of the terms of reference for the management of chub mackerel, including stock assessments and any requests for scientific advice from the Scientific and Statistical Committee.
- Develop and fund research priorities to document the foraging patterns of HMS species while they are in the Mid-Atlantic.

RFA appreciates the opportunity to comment on this amendment.

Sincerely,

Jim Donofrio

Chub Mackerel Scoping Comments

- 1. EAFM. We believe that the Council's Ecosystem Approach to Fisheries Management should not only be used as a restrictive management tool, but also a tool to allow fisheries to develop, grow and expand. If warming water temperatures increase availability of certain species or attract new species to the Mid Atlantic region, that climatically induced phenomenon should be viewed as an opportunity, not a restriction. Additionally, it is important to acknowledge that humans, as the apex predator, also need access to a diversity of prey to survive.
- 2. The Mid Atlantic/New England Fishery. As the scoping document indicates, Atlantic chub mackerel cover an extensive range, and support large scale fisheries in many countries. As of 2007, chub mackerel was one of the top ten species accounting for 30% of the world's catch and one of the ten not considered to be fully exploited.¹ The scoping document acknowledges that "[b]y comparison, the recent commercial fishery in the Mid-Atlantic and New England is fairly small".² Therefore, we continue to oppose a minimal 2.86 million lb interim limit on chub mackerel harvest while this amendment is completed, and support an interim harvest level of at least 5.25 million lbs.
- 3. Science. We currently do not have any detailed science on chub mackerel in the Mid Atlantic region, and the current NMFS survey methods do not adequately sample these fish. Consequently, reliable data can only be obtained through cooperation with the commercial industry, and we believe that the science and management of this stock must move forward in a collaborative manner.
- 4. Predators vs Forage. Chub mackerel are identified in the document as opportunistic predators of fish and squid. As chub mackerel and illex squid appear to share the same thermal habitat, chub mackerel most likely are predators of squid while in our region. Moving forward with this amendment, we believe it is also important to recognize chub mackerel's role as a predator. In fact, even the authors of the Lenfest Forage Fish paper do not consider chub mackerel to meet their definition of a "forage fish."<sup>3</sup>

- 5. Forage. The scoping document states that chub mackerel are "likely prey" for dogfish, monkfish, fluke, marine mammals and sharks. This statement is based on "records of scombrids (likely including chub mackerel)", "observations of scombrids in stomach contents, likely including chub mackerel", and "observations of scombrids in stomach contents, likely including chub mackerel". The Mid Atlantic and New England regions are home to various scombrid species, besides chub mackerel. The fact that scombrids occur in stomach samples of regional species is not novel, but without clear identification proving the scombrid remains are chub as opposed to other mackerel species and quantifiable data detailing what percentage of diets they comprise, assuming chub mackerel to be an important prey item for Mid Atlantic species is indefensible.
- 6. Billfish. During scoping presentations and discussion, there was considerable emphasis on billfish such as white marlin and the impact a chub mackerel fishery could have on that specie and related tournaments. The only reference provided is a personal communication from Dr. John Graves, dated July 2016, in which sampling of stomach contents in regional billfish tournaments yielded "many anecdotal observations of colleagues" which were consistent with the author's.8 According to that letter, chub mackerel was not the dominant prey item found in sampling. The sampling referenced is not a random stratified sampling protocol of the species, or scientifically designed survey, or peer reviewed study, but instead an account of opportunistic sampling of tournament fish. It does not distinguish between chub mackerel that were consumed in the wild vs chub mackerel that were used for tournament bait, and does not provide any comprehensive diet analysis or data. Therefore, treating the letter as a scientific document or study would be improper. We request that this distinction be made in future amendment materials. We also request that the status of these HMS stocks be noted in future amendment materials. According to NMFS' 2016 SAFE report, both white and blue marlin are overfished and overfishing is occurring. Despite their biological status, multimillions of dollars in prize money for winning tournament fish continue to encourage targeting of the stock, 10 and any issues with the stock appear to arise from recreational management issues, not forage issues. Therefore, it would be inappropriate to require a commercial fishery to shoulder any burden whatsoever of rebuilding a recreationally overfished stock, even if a significant relationship between stock status could be established. However, the only scientific, peer reviewed document available of which we are aware that examines the relationship between chub mackerel and billfish is the recently published Hillborn et. al. paper, which found no evidence of a positive relationship between striped marlin surplus production and Pacific chub mackerel abundance.11

&lt;sup>10</sup> See for example, the 2016 White Marlin Open, where the winning fish garnered $2.8 million in prize money, but is now in dispute in court over the winner twice failing a polygraph test, which is required for winnings over $50,000 because there is no oversight on the open water. http://www.baltimoresun.com/news/maryland/bs-md-white-marlin-open-dispute-20161103-story.html.

7. Specific Management Measures. We do not believe discretionary management measures such as limited access, possession limits, deductions from catch limits or quota in a following year, etc., are necessary at this time. We oppose any gear restrictions at this time, particularly any that would affect the illex fishery. We completely oppose any seasonal or spatial closures, since such measures would result in closure of the illex fishery.

Dr. Chris Moore, Executive Director Mid-Atlantic Fishery Management Council 800 North State Street, Suite 201 Dover, DE 19901 [sent via email]

Dear Dr. Moore,

On behalf of The Nature Conservancy, I am writing to express our support for the development of management measures for the chub mackerel fishery through the Chub Mackerel Amendment.

The Nature Conservancy's marine conservation work prioritizes sustainable seafood, strong coastal communities and a healthy ocean. We are committed to helping create and maintain the conditions necessary for healthy and resilient marine and estuarine food webs which benefit nature and people. On the Atlantic coast, long-term success in this effort requires ensuring that forage fishes remain abundant and available at all life stages, throughout their ranges.

We commend the Council's proactive protections of forage fish through the Unmanaged Forage Amendment, as well as the establishment of the Council Policy on forage fish conservation and management (p.6, EAFM Guidance Doc 2016) that states that the Council will "support the maintenance of an adequate forage base in the Mid-Atlantic to ensure ecosystem productivity, structure and function and to support sustainable fishing communities." The EAFM Guidance Document provides guidance on potential modifications to reference points and modifications to the Council's Risk Policy that are suitable for determining appropriate annual catch limits for forage fish. We encourage the Council to develop management measures for the chub mackerel fishery consistent with this policy.

In addition to setting initial catch limits for chub mackerel, we hope that the Council will create a plan, in collaboration with industry partners, to gather more scientific data on chub mackerel to understand and track the impacts of fishing on the population and the ecosystem. The methods and criteria the Council establishes for the Mid Atlantic chub mackerel fishery may serve as a model for development of monitoring and management approaches for other new forage fisheries that may be proposed pursuant to the Unmanaged Forage Amendment. Accordingly, we encourage the Council to develop an approach for chub mackerel fishery monitoring and evaluation that includes attention to pelagic habitat characteristics and food-web dynamics in addition to traditional measures of distribution, abundance and harvest. When building a chub mackerel stock assessment model, it may be useful to create a model that could be expanded to include other species in the future.

During the Unmanaged Forage Amendment process it became apparent that very few vessels have been participating in the chub mackerel fishery. We suggest that given significant uncertainty about the future potential magnitude of this fishery, the Council should proceed cautiously and establish initial catch levels that will not encourage industry investments that may not be sustainable in the long term.

Mid-Atlantic Seascape 530 East Main Street, Suite 800 Richmond, VA 23219

The fishery for chub mackerel has highlighted the need to proactively prepare for new or rapidly increased harvests of any species. Dynamic global markets, changes in demand, emerging technologies and species shifts due to changing climate are likely to create opportunity for new and expanding fisheries. We recommend that the Council develop a comprehensive policy on emerging fisheries to ensure we have adequate science to set sustainable harvest levels, including consideration of ecosystem level impacts. We do not see this as part of the Chub Mackerel Amendment, but rather accomplished through a separate process. This new policy would clearly outline the process and necessary conditions for establishing new fisheries, generally placing the burden of proof on the proponents while not unnecessarily restricting sustainable fishery development.

Thank you for the opportunity to share our comments. We look forward to supporting the development of this Amendment through its finalization. Please contact me at kate.wilke@tnc.org or (804) 249-3412 with any questions or ideas for how we might assist.

RE: Chub Mackerel Scoping Comments

Dear Dr. Moore,

On behalf of Wild Oceans, a non-profit organization supported by conservation-minded anglers since 1973, I am pleased to provide recommendations for moving forward with the development of the Amendment to Manage Atlantic Chub Mackerel as a stock in the Atlantic Mackerel, Squid, and Butterfish Fishery Management Plan (MSB FMP). How the Mid-Atlantic Council proceeds with the chub mackerel amendment, the first forage species action to follow the finalization of the Ecosystem Approach to Fisheries Management (EAFM) Guidance Document, will be critical to advancing Council EAFM policies and working toward the Council's vision of "healthy and productive marine ecosystems supporting thriving, sustainable marine fisheries that provide the greatest overall benefit to stakeholders."

In the Mid-Atlantic, chub mackerel "occurs in high frequency" in the diets of highly migratory species (HMS), especially billfishes and large tunas, <sup>1</sup> attracting these highly valuable recreational species to the region. According to a 2014 NOAA Technical Memorandum, "Atlantic HMS Angling Permit holders were estimated to have spent $23.2 million on HMS trip expenditures (e.g., fuel, ice, bait, food), and $151 million on durable goods (e.g., boats, vehicles, rods and reels). These expenditures are estimated to have contributed $266 million in total economic output to the economy of the Northeast and Mid-Atlantic regions, $153 million in value added outputs, $96 million in labor income, and 1,824 jobs from Maine to North Carolina."

In recognition of chub mackerel's important role as prey for highly migratory species and its great indirect economic value in sustaining HMS fisheries, we request that the Council incorporate the following recommendations as its moves ahead with the development of amendment alternatives.

• Incorporate the EAFM Guidance Document goal and forage policies as part of the purpose and need statement for this amendment.

With an overarching goal "to manage for ecologically sustainable utilization of living marine resources while maintaining ecosystem productivity, structure, and function," the EAFM Guidance Document lays out a roadmap for protecting marine ecosystems that includes a policy "to support the maintenance of an adequate forage base in the Mid-Atlantic to ensure ecosystem productivity, structure and function and to support sustainable fishing communities." For forage species targeted by fisheries, the Council has committed to establishing optimal harvest strategies based on evaluations of tradeoffs between their indirect value of being left in the water as forage versus their direct harvest market value. The ecosystem goal and the forage objectives should be reflected in the purpose and need statement to ensure that amendment alternatives are consistent with and advance the Council's commitment to EAFM as described in the Guidance Document.

Consistent with the purpose and need of the Unmanaged Forage Omnibus Amendment from which this action stemmed, prevent the expansion of directed fisheries for chub mackerel "until the Council has had an adequate opportunity to assess the scientific information relating to any new or expanded directed fisheries and consider potential impacts to existing fisheries, fishing communities, and the marine ecosystem."<sup>3</sup>

Alternatives should include holding the quota at 2.86 million pounds until a scientific assessment, as described above, is conducted to evaluate potential impacts, especially impacts to the marine ecosystem and fishing communities dependent on chub mackerel as forage for their target species. Establishing a fishery control date that does not permit the fishery to grow beyond the current fleet of fishery participants should also be presented as an alternative.

 In order to provide the greatest benefit to all stakeholders, conduct an evaluation of relevant economic, social and ecological factors to inform harvest strategy options for chub mackerel.

To determine how chub mackerel should be managed for the greatest overall benefit to the Nation – Optimum Yield (OY) <sup>i</sup> – the Council must look beyond core requirements for preventing overfishing. In the case of chub mackerel, the protection of marine ecosystems and recreational opportunities provided by leaving chub mackerel in the water to fulfill its ecological role as forage must also be taken into account. National Standard 1 Guidelines give direction to councils for assessing Optimum Yield, ii and we request that this assessment take the form of an explicit evaluation of management strategies against the ecosystem goal and policies described above. Management strategy evaluation (MSE) is a tool highlighted in the EAFM Guidance Document for determining if management actions are likely to achieve specified objectives and is intended to be an inclusive stakeholder process. We request that the feasibility for conducting an MSE, as a purposeful assessment of Optimum Yield, be explored as part of this amendment.

 Include alternatives for ecological reference points for chub mackerel. Alternatives should include a biomass threshold of 40% of an unfished population and a biomass target of 75% of an unfished population, reference points that have been widely endorsed for conservatively managing forage fish stocks.

It is important to acknowledge that, because of the many components, variables, uncertainties and trade-offs involved, "ecological reference points" do not become apparent from even the most rigorous study. They are ultimately a policy decision. Consequently, in the quest to develop ecological reference points for forage species, an overwhelming consensus has emerged around setting a minimum biomass threshold of 40% of an un-fished population (approximating the MSY level) and a target level of 75% of an un-fished population, a level thought to most fairly balance the needs of fisheries with those of the ecosystem.<sup>4</sup>

We are pleased that the Council is seeking a contractor to develop a quantitative assessment for Atlantic chub mackerel and hope that the assessment will deliver information necessary for understanding the condition of the population as well as establishing ecological reference points. As the Council considers applicants who responded to the recent request for proposals, we urge you to prioritize assessment methods most suited for forage fish, methods that can produce biomass estimates and biomass-based reference points, and that explicitly incorporate ecosystem considerations into the assessment model, such as methods described by Moustahfid et al for explicitly modeling predation mortality. <sup>5</sup>

• Construct time/area/gear closure options for minimizing conflict among HMS anglers and commercial chub mackerel fishermen.

HMS fishing in the Mid-Atlantic is dependent on a healthy supply of forage to attract and sustain migrating predators like billfishes and tunas. A spatial and temporal analysis of commercial chub mackerel fishing effort should be compared with the locations and timing of HMS tournaments and other offshore recreational activity. Such an analysis could reveal areas of potential overlap between the directed chub mackerel fishery and HMS fishing. Options for closures, including rolling closures, that safeguard a supply of chub mackerel for dependent HMS predators and minimize conflict between the commercial sector and HMS anglers should be explored and presented as alternatives in this amendment. Effectiveness of area-based measures would be enhanced by better understanding foraging patterns of HMS species while they are in the Mid-Atlantic, and we ask the Council to make this a research priority and provide the necessary oversight and funding.

 Invite HMS recreational fishermen and scientists to serve on technical, scientific and advisory groups to ensure that HMS economics, ecology and fishery knowledge are sufficiently incorporated into amendment analyses and alternatives.

The Ecosystem and Ocean Planning Committee and its advisory panel should also be involved to provide input and recommendations for upholding EAFM Guidance Document policies.

In closing, we reiterate that the precedent set by this amendment will set the stage for advancing ecosystem-based approaches to forage fishery management both in our region and nationwide. We hope the Mid-Atlantic Council will seize upon this opportunity to demonstrate its commitment to the EAFM Guidance Document policies, and we look forward to working with you as the chub mackerel amendment develops.

Sincerely,

Pam Lyons Gromen Executive Director

RE: Chub Mackerel Scoping Comments

Dear Dr. Moore:

On behalf of the 250 employees of our family-owned, vertically-integrated seafood processing facility and the company-owned and independently-owned commercial fishing vessels and crew working to support us here in the port of Cape May, I am writing to provide our comments on the Scoping Document to Manage Atlantic Chub Mackerel (Scomber colias) as a Stock in the Mackerel, Squid, and Butterfish Fishery Management Plan (FMP). Thank you for the opportunity to do so and for holding a hearing on the scoping document in Cape May last week.

- We support the Council creating a management plan for the chub mackerel fishery, rather than designating the resource as an ecosystem component species, and recommend that the management of the chub fishery be considered as part of the Illex FMP due to the spatial and temporal overlap of chub mackerel availability and the bottom trawl Illex squid fishery (Scoping Document, Page 9) Since the two species seem to share the same thermal habitat niche, chub mackerel is also likely to be an Illex predator species. This is an opportunistic fishery for us, with an inverse correlation between Illex squid and chub mackerel catches, as the document informs us. We urge the Council to get to the SSC as soon as possible in order to create the foundation for a reasonable, sustainable fishery into the future.
- We agree with Julia's comments to the Council, in her May 24 memo concerning the outcome of the chub mackerel assessment RFP, that, "It may not be possible to sufficiently assess chub mackerel in this region, given the current data limitations", and support her recommendation that the Council "prioritize data collection to support future stock assessments...(through) collaboration with the NEFSC and the fishing industry." There are only a few (3-5) commercial vessels capable of directing on this resource due to their swimming speed and it is unlikely that the Bigelow regularly catches these fish for this reason. These few vessels are likely all equipped with side-scan sonar capable of surveying the large chub resource emerging in this region, which should become a Council priority in the near term. Just this week, vessel captains landing Illex have reported very expansive schools of chub mackerel offshore, from shoal to deep water. The industry is capable of working with the Science Center to develop a survey of these fish, in order to better inform fishery managers, and we stand ready to do so.

- To demonstrate our willingness to assist the Council in developing data to sustainably manage this fishery into the future, I am attaching a paper from researchers at the University of Southern Mississippi describing our collaboration with Seafreeze, Ltd., through the Science Center for Marine Fisheries (a National Science Foundation / Industry /University partnership: http://scemfis.org) to sample Chub mackerel catches at our plants. Last summer, some 1,500 samples were taken, which were measured and weighed following established protocols. These data will be used to describe the biology of the stock and the biostatistical characteristics of the fishery.
- We continue to oppose the Council's establishment of a minimal, and arbitrary, 2.86 million pound (1,297 mt) limit on chub mackerel catches in the region (average 2013-2015 landings), as part of the Mid-Atlantic Forage Species Omnibus Amendment. In our comments on the Forage Amendment, we have encouraged NMFS to allow an interim harvest of at least 5.25 million pounds, which is equal to the 2013 reported catch, in order to reduce the potential for discards until the SSC can establish a reasonable biologically-based TAC as part of this FMP-development process.
- This Atlantic chub mackerel resource has the potential to provide needed bait for other food fisheries in the Mid-Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific regions and is in demand in areas of the world, particularly Africa, where people are looking for reasonably-priced protein for human consumption. There is no evidence to indicate that interim catches at the 5.26 million pound (2,381 mt) level harm the chub mackerel resource in the Northwest Atlantic. In fact, in the Bay of Biscay region, in the Northeast Atlantic at our same latitude, a chub mackerel MSY of some 25,000 mt has been projected for the emerging fishery there at a time when Atlantic mackerel and sardine production has been impacted by climate regime shift, just as is apparently taking place on this side of the Atlantic. <sup>1</sup>
- We agree with the language in the scoping document stating that this species ranges from New England through Argentina, including the Gulf of Mexico, in the Northwest Atlantic region, and throughout the Northeast Atlantic and Mediterranean Sea, which is why we object to the low interim quota established by the Council as part of the Forage Amendment. This is a vast resource with only a small portion available to the fishery, and only during the summer months as the region's ocean warms. We believe that this stock is an emerging fishery in this region, as an apparent result of locally-warming ocean temperatures. Chub mackerel should be considered a future opportunity for local fishermen and dealers during the summer months as it is likely they will become a regularly encountered, increasingly valuable, species as warming continues.
- Fishing vessels and processors depend upon a great number of fisheries in order to sustain year-round operations in the Port of Cape May. In Cape May County, commercial fishing is one of the few year-round employment opportunities available to our area residents.

- Each species that we encounter, land and process, including the emerging chub mackerel resource, represents an important part of our ability to support our plant workers, office workers, boat crews and a variety of ancillary support businesses such as welders, HVAC technicians and fuel suppliers and all of their families throughout each year.
- Unfortunately, the scoping document seems to lay out a scenario where the low-value chub resource ($0.19 average price cited at page 8), could be set aside for higher value recreational billfish fisheries in the region ($96 million in total economic output cited on page 12). Not withstanding the fact that some of those billfish resources, like white marlin, are overharvested (see NMFS HMS 2016 SAFE Report <sup>2</sup>), it is wrong for the Council to consider removing the opportunity for commercial fishermen to harvest an emerging fishery resource, and create coastal jobs, through conservative 'forage fish' policies that do not provide fair access to all of the human predators in the ocean ecosystem.
- If chub mackerel were the only pelagic resource available to the billfish recreational angler, that would be one thing, but we know that thousands of metric tons of other species, including menhaden, butterfish, scup, squid and herrings also swim through those offshore canyons providing many other foraging opportunities for these opportunistic feeders. Billfish tournaments are a hobby, while we are in the business of feeding people and providing bait for other food fisheries around the U.S. Please give us a chance with this resource to create a sustainable future for our employees and the independent fishermen that we work with.
- A recent evaluation of forage fish management approaches for a range of U.S. fisheries shows little evidence for a strong connection between an individual forage fish's abundance and the rate of change in abundance of their predators.<sup>3</sup> The Council must strike a fair balance between these competing human predators though the establishment of this FMP, as required by the Magnuson-Steven's Act National Standard 1. We encourage you to evaluate the VIMs stomach data base to verify that, indeed, chub mackerel is not the only species eaten by Atlantic billfish. This forage conflict should be described in a more balanced way than the scoping document does currently, given the political nature of this debate and the bias evident in the data reported in the Graves letter to the Council a year ago.
- Relative to the 'required measures' portion of the document, we agree that ACLs will be necessary and that it is likely that a recreational and commercial allocation will occur with this species as is the case for other MSB species but we do not understand why potentially restrictive forage policies are discussed in the required measures portion of this document and not as part of the 'discretionary measures' description. This makes us extremely wary of where this process may be going. The appropriate utilization of 'forage fish' does not mean less or no catch for commercial fishermen particularly since the Council's risk policies for all species under management already ensure that about 80 per cent of any fishery resource available annually in the region is currently being left in the water as a result of strict fishing mortality limits, which should also be the case in the chub mackerel fishery going forward.

Lund's Fisheries to MAFMC – Chub Mackerel Scoping Comments

- We agree that EFH will have to be described as part of the FMP and encourage the Council to consider the entire range of chub mackerel distribution, including NEFMC-managed waters, as part of the management unit. Otherwise only Mid-Atlantic fishermen will be required to bear the cost of establishing a sustainable chub mackerel fishery.
- Relative to the discretionary measures listed in the document, we anticipate that permits and reporting will be required, as is the case in all the other fisheries we participate in. It may be premature to determine if limited access or a control date should be considered in this fishery until we understand the magnitude of the ABC that the SSC will eventually establish. However, it may be prudent for the Council to establish a control date first, as part of this FMP-development process.
- It is also similarly impossible to make recommendations on landing limits and possession limits without knowing what the magnitude of an ABC may be. We do not expect that minimium fish size restrictions would be established for chub mackerel since they mature quickly and spawn throughout the year (Scoping Document, Pages 7-8) and since minimum fish sizes are not used to manage other, similar, low-trophic pelagic species like Atlantic herring or Atlantic mackerel in this region. We also do not anticipate gear restrictions would be a requirement of this FMP either, since chub mackerel is caught incidently in the Illex fishery, primarily, and that gear has not changed in years. Gear restrictions could be expected to negatively impact a valuable Illex squid fishery. We do not expect seasonal and area closures to work in this fishery either since the fish seem to be available in this region during only the warmer times of the year (<95% of the catch is reported as occurring between June and October – Scoping Document, Page 8) and these restrictions would work to close the Illex fishery, given the temporal and spatial overlap of the two fisheries. Finally, we do not support the concept of carving up the canyons in the summer to provide exclusive access to chub mackerel for billfish tournament participants in those federal waters, as suggested at page 17 of the scoping document.
- When this scoping process was discussed at the April Council meeting, SSC Chair John Boreman suggested that a data workshop be held as this FMP-development process moves ahead. We support this idea and hope that it takes place in the near future although a collaborative workshop to develop ideas for future data collection may be a more fruitful approach at this point in the process.

Thank you for your attention to and your consideration of our comments and concerns. Please do not hesitate to contact me if I can provide you with any additional information.

With best regards,

Jeff Reichle

RE: Scoping Comments on the Proposed Amendment to add Chub Mackerel to the Atlantic Mackerel, Squid, and Butterfish Fishery Management Plan

Dear Chairman Luisi, Executive Director Moore, and Committee Chairman King:

We are writing on behalf of The Pew Charitable Trusts (Pew) to provide scoping comments on the Mid-Atlantic Fishery Management Council's (Council) "Chub Mackerel Amendment" (Amendment) to the Atlantic Mackerel, Squid, and Butterfish Fishery Management Plan (MSB FMP). This amendment was initiated because the Council discovered during the initial stages of the Unmanaged Forage Omnibus Amendment that industry had recently initiated a significant chub mackerel fishery. Catch expanded from an average of 239,777 pounds between 2002 and 2012, to 5,249,686 pounds in 2013, 1,230,411 pounds in 2014, and 2,108,337 pounds in 2015. In August 2016, the Council voted unanimously to add chub mackerel as a Stock in the Fishery.

There is no question chub mackerel require conservation and management under the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (MSA), and the Council must now develop a management plan for the species. Chub mackerel are essential prey for many important Highly Migratory Species (HMS) such as Atlantic bluefin tuna, albacore tuna, yellowtail, amberjack tuna, marlin, swordfish, and mahi mahi, as well as sharks, whales, and rays. If chub mackerel are caught at unsustainable levels, as could occur if the existing fishery continues without appropriate regulation, it could have tremendous negative impacts to these predator species and ocean ecosystems. Protecting chub mackerel's role as forage must be the central focus when establishing goals and objectives for an FMP Amendment and determining how to best manage the chub mackerel fishery. Management measures must, from the outset, consider the ecological and economic value of chub mackerel as vital members of the ecosystem and as essential prey for important predators that form the basis for a thriving game fishing industry and bring in millions of dollars in tournament and tourism revenue to many coastal communities.<sup>4</sup>

The Council's Ecosystem Approaches to Fisheries Management (EAFM) Guidance Document offers excellent guidance on how best to manage forage species in a way that accounts for predators and the ecosystem. The EAFM Guidance Document states that "[o]ptimal management of forage fish ultimately depend on the trade-off between their indirect in situ value [as forage for highly prized gamefish like tuna and marlin] versus the direct harvest market value."<sup>5</sup> "Optimum yield" is defined by NOAA Fisheries as "the harvest level for a species that achieves the greatest overall benefits, including economic, social, and biological considerations... including both commercial and sport yields;" considering the overall benefit to the nation. In evaluating these tradeoffs, the Council must offer a full range of alternatives for chub mackerel management. The Council must consider as part of its analysis, the tradeoffs between the value of chub mackerel as essential forage for predators and their general contribution to energy transfer and balance in the marine ecosystem versus chub mackerel's harvest. These decisions must be based on a full and fair analysis that relies upon the best available science.<sup>7</sup> The Council must consider both ecological tradeoffs and economic ones, including what is necessary to maintain recreational benefits of any fishery on a continuing basis.<sup>8</sup> Assessing tradeoffs of chub mackerel as forage for gamefish that support millions of dollars of tournament and tourism revenue<sup>9</sup> verses their direct harvest market value may lead the Council to conclude that that optimum yield for chub mackerel is zero, and there should be no directed fishery for chub mackerel.

The Council explicitly requested comments on how best to manage chub mackerel under the MSA. Specifically we recommend:

1. Manage chub mackerel with ecological reference points that maintain a high biomass at all times. Evaluate tradeoffs between the species' indirect in situ value versus their direct harvest market value to ensure its forage value is protected. The Council's EAFM Guidance Document states that ecological reference points for forage should be more conservative than  $F_{\rm MSY}$ . Chub mackerel would be the first forage fishery to open after finalization of the Council's EAFM Guidance Document and will set an important precedent. The EAFM Guidance Document states that it is the Council's policy to, in conjunction with its Science and Statistical Committee (SSC) and the Northeast Fisheries Science Center (NEFSC), "promote the timely collection of data and development of analyses to support the biological, economic and social evaluation of ecosystem level tradeoffs including those required to establish an optimal forage fish harvest policy." In performing such tradeoffs analysis and developing the draft amendment, the Council should consider as one of the alternatives in the range under consideration, that optimum yield for this species should be set at zero (thus there would be no directed fishery). The EAFM Guidance Document also offers several forage fish specific reference points that should be considered as part of this analysis:

- a. The Council should manage chub mackerel with risk levels based on the level of knowledge. Management of forage should be appropriate for the level of information available for a given stock, with more conservative reference points for stocks with low levels of scientific information to protect from uncertainty, especially forage species; 13
- b. The Council should use ecosystem appropriate biomass (B) reference points to manage chub mackerel. Establish an ecosystem appropriate biomass target reference point of 75 percent virgin biomass, <sup>14</sup> and biomass limit reference point of 40 percent virgin biomass;
- c. The Council should use ecosystem appropriate fishing mortality (F) reference points for chub mackerel. Establish an ecosystem appropriate upper limit for fishing mortality on chub mackerel of 75 percent of fishing mortality at maximum sustainable yield, (F<sub>MSY</sub>); <sup>15</sup> and
- d. The Council should use a forage fish harvest control rule to manage chub mackerel. Establish a harvest control rule where fishing mortality is reduced as stock biomass drops below the target biomass (75 percent virgin biomass), and is brought to zero when the biomass threshold is reached (40 percent virgin biomass). <sup>16</sup>

- 2. Collect and consider as much scientific information as possible on Atlantic chub mackerel Scomber colias, and where appropriate its Pacific cousin Scomber japonicas, when determining ecological reference points, catch targets, optimum yield, possession limits, and Essential Fish Habitat. National Standard 1 Guidelines mandate that management decisions for chub mackerel must be based on the best available science. The properties in this mandate is the premise that good management is based on high-quality scientific information. Gathering the necessary data will be a challenge with this offshore species because it is unlikely to be found in the trawl survey and will be caught by vessels that currently receive less than 10 percent observer coverage. Unless that situation changes, the Council should plan to manage a data-limited fishery and act with caution accordingly. The Council, the SSC, and the NEFSC must diligently collect comprehensive scientific information on the biology, ecology, and economics of these species in every way possible to guide Council management decisions.
  - a. The Council must use the best available scientific information to analyze the importance of chub mackerel as forage for ecologically and economically valuable Highly Migratory Species. The Council should work with scientists to gather diet data for tuna, billfish, sharks and other important predator species that rely on chub mackerel to determine the ecological needs of predators. Additionally, the Council should request, compile, and consider economic information from public and private entities that can guide a comprehensive evaluation of economic tradeoffs of direct market value of chub mackerel versus their value as prey for economically important predator species. This information should guide management decisions determining optimum yield for chub mackerel.
  - b. The Council should consider scientific information about the impacts of fishing on other global chub mackerel populations. Chub mackerel species are caught by many nations. <sup>19</sup> Japan is both the world's largest harvester and largest importer of chub mackerel and may have a long time series of catch data. <sup>20</sup> The Council must understand the impacts of this huge fishery on the Pacific chub mackerel population, and what the impacts have been to their predators. In particular, the Council should seek any evidence of the species vulnerability to fishing pressure, for example productivity declines that correspond to increases in catch over time.

- c. When making management decisions for chub mackerel the Council should collect and consider economic information on global chub mackerel populations and markets. There is already a global market for chub mackerel. They are sold in many other parts of the world including Japan, <sup>21</sup> China, <sup>22</sup> Indonesia, <sup>23</sup> and throughout southern Europe and Africa. <sup>24</sup> Chub mackerel is considered commercially important throughout its global range.<sup>25</sup>
- d. In assessing catch levels for chub mackerel, the Council should also consider the best available science about chub mackerel population responses to environmental variables like climate, currents, and other physical elements of the environment that could have impacts on recruitment, and see if it can be differentiated from the effects of fishing. Such information could help establish the species' vulnerability to climate change. Management should respond to fluctuations in recruitment and catch should decrease when recruitment is in decline.<sup>26</sup>
- e. Bycatch in this fishery could be considerable.<sup>27</sup> A thorough understanding of impacts to non-target species is essential when making decisions regarding gear type, permitting, and time and area management in the chub mackerel fishery. Purse seines and trawl nets are the predominant gears used to target chub mackerel, impacting pelagic and benthic species and habitats.<sup>28</sup> The Council should estimate the percentage of bycatch of important predators like tuna and marlin and their young of the year, as well as other benthic species like black seabass, summer flounder, and tilefish (blueline and golden) and take this into account when making decisions about the fishery, including requiring measures to minimize bycatch when establishing management measures.
- f. Chub mackerel is a coastal pelagic species occurring from the surface to about 250 or 300 meter depth and their range is the entire Atlantic coast. 29 Seasonal migrations may be very extended.<sup>30</sup> For these reasons, Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) designation will be challenging. The Council must use the best available science to guide EFH designation for chub mackerel.<sup>31</sup>
- 3. Accountability measures for chub mackerel should be similar to Atlantic mackerel and include a closure of the fishery once landings reach 90 percent of the allowable catch, after which a possession limit that prevents further directed fishing should be allowed until 100 percent of the quota is caught, at which point the possession limit should be reduced to zero.<sup>32</sup>Any commercial overages should be deducted from the following year's allowable catch.<sup>33</sup> Slippage should be prohibited with comparable measures to the Atlantic mackerel fishery.

- 4. The Council should implement time and area management for this species from the outset to avoid preventable bycatch of HMS species and localized depletion of valuable HMS prey species during prime HMS fishing season. There is a considerable conflict between the needs of the tuna and billfish fishing communities for chub as forage and the harvest needs of the bourgeoning chub fishery. There are many tuna and bill fishing tournaments along the east coast ranging from Key West to Maine.<sup>34</sup> Each of these tournaments brings revenue into the coastal cities and towns that host them,<sup>35</sup> and the Council should develop a comprehensive understanding of these economic benefits. The clearest and most impartial way to address the needs of both sets of fishermen is to include chub mackerel seasonal and spatial closures similar to those implemented in the Scup Gear Restricted Areas (that protect juvenile scup from being taken as bycatch in the squid fishery) along the canyon line that correspond with the HMS fishing tournament season for that region.
- 5. The management jurisdiction for chub mackerel should be the full range of the species. Every other forage species in the MSB FMP is managed throughout its range. Managing with an ecologically arbitrary boundary based on political jurisdictional lines can have negative impacts on the species and create a management loophole. The Council struggled with this loophole in the past with blueline tilefish. The Council was forced to initiate emergency action the past with blueline tilefish. The Virginia/North Carolina border and no restrictions north of the border. Different rules in different political jurisdictions make management confusing, hard to enforce, and ineffective in ensuring a species does not become overfished. We recognize that the range of chub mackerel is considerable (the entire Atlantic coast) but this Council has demonstrated its ability to be collaborative with other management bodies in effective management of cross-jurisdictional species.

Pew supports the Council's commitment to an ecosystem approach to fisheries management and requests that its EAFM Guidance Document be applied to the federal conservation and management of chub mackerel as a new precedent-setting FMP is created. The Council must consider the full impacts of its chub mackerel management decisions on the ecosystem, and specifically the predators and fishermen that depend upon the species as an important source of forage. We are encouraged by the Chub Mackerel Scoping Document's recognition that consideration of chub mackerel's role as prey is essential to the development of this Amendment. Comments: Chub Mackerel Amendment

Dear Dr. Moore:

Please accept these comments on behalf of the Garden State Seafood Association (GSSA)The GSSA membership is comprised of commercial fishermen, vessel owners, seafood processors and associated businesses in the State of New Jersey.

- 1) We support the Council creating a management plan for the chub mackerel fishery and request that the management of the chub fishery be considered as part of the Illex FMP.
- 2) We are in a unique situation and need to take full advantage of being at the forefront of a developing fishery with great potential. For that reason we ask that the Council brings this matter to the attention of the SSC for their deliberation. It is recognized that no formal stock assessment will be conducted and so the industry is committed to gathering reliable data and we believe that the science and management of this stock must move forward in a collaborative manner.

- 3) We must resolve an important issue as related to the Council's decision to implement a 2.86 million pound limit on chub mackerel catches. It has come to our attention that the information provided to the Council from Dr. John Graves regarding the role of chub mackerel in the diets of billfish is biased, anecdotal and insufficient to provide any advice. We request that the catch limit be revisited.
- 4) We are in opposition of the Council performing a "trade off" approach between chub mackerel and billfish. As I stated during the April meeting billfish in the Atlantic are overfished and overfishing is occurring. Until that changes and when tournaments are under adequate scrutiny and reporting requirements, it is not possible to consider chub mackerel role in the billfish health.
- 5) We agree that EFH will have to be described as part of the FMP and encourage the Council to consider the entire range of chub mackerel distribution, including NEFMC-managed waters, as part of the management unit. Otherwise only Mid-Atlantic fishermen will be required to bear the cost of establishing a sustainable chub mackerel fishery.
- 6) We do not believe discretionary management measures such as limited access, possession limits, deductions from catch limits or quota in a following year, etc., are necessary at this time. We oppose any gear restrictions at this time, particularly any that would affect the illex fishery. We oppose any seasonal or spatial closures, since such measures would result in closure of the illex fishery.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment.

I am writing on behalf of the Brooklyn Urban Anglers Association. We established the group in 2009 to promote positive water awareness in New York City, including responsible fishing in our many waterways. We believe the chub mackerel, like all forage species, are a critical component of the marine ecosystem and should be managed responsibly and with regards to predator-prey relationships as much as commercial yield considerations. We have supported the management of other forage species, in particular menhaden, in the past and support the continued actions of the Council to protect these public resources that are so important to the health of our oceans. # Mid-Atlantic Council to Hold Public Hearings for Chub Mackerel Amendment

The Mid-Atlantic Fishery Management Council will hold six public hearings in May 2017 to solicit public input on the Chub Mackerel Amendment to the Atlantic Mackerel, Squid, and Butterfish Fishery Management Plan (FMP). The Council is also soliciting written comments on the amendment through May 31, 2017.

The amendment considers measures to manage Atlantic chub mackerel (Scomber colias) as a stock in the Atlantic Mackerel, Squid, and Butterfish FMP with catch limits, accountability measures, and other conservation and management measures required by the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act. The Council is developing this action in response to the recent development of a directed chub mackerel commercial fishery in the Mid-Atlantic and Southern New England.

Please impose catch limitations on these critical forage species. Additionally, the destruction of our east coasts Atlantic menhaden stock is something you should be very interested in as they are a primary food source for many menhaden dependent predator species that our fisheries rely on. Our east coasts food web is being irreparably damaged by the chronic overfishing of menhaden. Leaving between 1-9 percent of menhaden B zero in the water annually is catastrophic fisheries management. Menhaden is known to school as far fifty miles off shore. You should be protecting the menhaden in federal waters with a FMP for federal waters .

Comments: Dear Council,

As a member of the outdoor and fishing products industry I am asking that you use the best available science to ensure our game fish have enough forage to thrive. In the last 15 years we have seen striped bass numbers decline from a combination of malnutrition, mycobacteriosis and overfishing. Though mortality through directed fishing was reduced, and menhaden stocks are on the rise, I think good forage supplies of a variety of species is critical for these fish to have successful spawns and YOY production.

Comments: It's really important to collect accurate data on the impact of the commercial chub mackerel fishery on mackerel harvest sustainability, health of gamefish stocks, and economic investment and return of commercial and recreational anglers. Only then can the cost/ benefit analysis be performed that will guide effective management of this fishery. My understanding is that the chub mackerel fishery has expanded rnecently even though price is very very low, while recreational angler continue to spend many millions of dollars on offshore trips ad equipment, which also creates many jobs. When accurate impact data is obtained, scientists, commercial fishermen, and recreational anglers should be included in the analysis and decisional process.

Keep Me Informed:

The following letter was submitted by 6 individuals (Justin Brown, Aaron Polkoski, Mark Seymour, Gary Sink, Andrew Cecil, and Kevin Donaghey), as well as by the Billfish Foundation (included with organizational letters).

Dear Chris & Council Members,

As a billfish angler I recognize the importance of protecting chub (Tinker) mackerel and other forage fish species. I applaud the Council's earlier action to implement protections and regret the sunset on chub (tinker) mackerel, which now requires you to begin a new amendment process. Even so, thank you for the opportunity to submit comments during the scoping process.

In light of the huge harvesting capacity of the very large commercial trawlers that target low dollar value forage fish, expanding the harvest limit for these vessels would undermine the high value recreational fisheries for billfish and tunas. Chub mackerel and other forage fish are very important to support the recreational fishing industry in the Mid-Atlantic region and beyond. Degrading the economic benefits flowing from the recreational billfish and tuna fisheries in the region, including benefits from tournaments and businesses, plus benefits from support service businesses, would be economically detrimental to the region. Excessive extraction of forage species from the ecosystem can also lead to imbalances within the system, which would then add to further economic losses to the region. If retaining the current commercial harvest rate can be achieved without ecologic or economic losses then you have found the right balance. Keep in mind that many billfish and tuna anglers have the economic means to go elsewhere to fish when their encounter rates with marlin and tuna drop in a region. The regional businesses do not have the means to move, so the Mid-Atlantic region would lose. A commercial fishery exists, but at the same time balance is needed to insure that the recreational fishery can continue to thrive.

Forage species, including chub (Tinker) mackerel, within your management jurisdiction should have benefit of input and review by advisory panels, plus science, statistical and economic analyses before any recommendations are considered.

You have a tough job and I applaud you for implementing some protections for forage species, but now is the time to include chub (Tinker) mackerel with other forage species for longer term protections.

5-10-17 Dear Dr. Moore, In not a scientist, but I know that the bottom of the food chain must he protected, or the whole system will collapse. Please use all the scientific information available to set limits for the catching of chuh mackeral. Notoday thought California's sardines could be over-fished, but they were, to drastic effect. Comments: To whom it may concern,

Thank you for taking the following comments into consideration regarding the MAFMC's amendment to add chub mackerel as a managed stock in the mackerel, squid, and butterfish fisheries management plan. As you are aware, Chub mackerel are a very important forage species for many of the sportfish targeted by recreational anglers such as tuna, marlin, swordfish, sharks and other highly migratory species. These anglers and offshore charters depend on a large abundance of forage to concentrate predatory species in the Mid-Atlantic Canyons and surrounding areas. These two fisheries (Charters and Recreation anglers) generate millions of dollars of economic benefit throughout the summer months for coastal towns like Ocean City, MD. In turn, the large scale harvest of chub mackerel can negatively effect the abundance of sportfish and hurt our resort towns economically. The chub mackeral are of low value to the commercial industry at under 20 cents per pound. The harvest of large amounts of these fish should not outweigh the importance of their presence to currently established and highly valuable fisheries.

I believe the MAFMC should consider:

- -Adding advisors and members with expertise in the economics of the HMS fisheries to the appropriate advisory panels, FMAT, and Scientific and Statistical Committee.
- -Including protection of the existing Mid-Atlantic marlin and tuna fisheries in the goals and objectives of the amendment and in the definition of Optimum Yield for the chub mackerel fishery.
- -Including a comprehensive description and economic analysis of the existing Mid-Atlantic recreational fisheries (private, charter, and tournament) for marlin and tuna in the amendment, including seasonal and spatial fishing effort.
- -Include management options that would avoid negative impacts to existing HMS fisheries, including options for Optimum Yield that would be based on capping the chub fishery at historical levels.
- -Include a comprehensive suite of management alternatives that would mitigate any impacts to existing HMS fisheries and avoid conflict with new fisheries, including seasonal and spatial restrictions on directed fishing for chub mackerel to prevent industrial-scale removals of chub mackerel until after marlin, tuna and other HMS species have migrated from the Mid-Atlantic canyons.
- -Include risks to the existing HMS fisheries in all of the terms of reference for the management of chub mackerel, including stock assessments and any requests for scientific advice from the Scientific and Statistical Committee.
- -Develop and fund research priorities to document the foraging patterns of HMS species while they are in the Mid-Atlantic.

Thank you for your time and consideration. Sincerely Michael Wissel

Subject: Please support healthy oceans and a strong economy by protecting chub mackerel -- Chub Mackerel Scoping Comments

Dear Dr. Moore,

Thank you for the opportunity to provide public comment on the Chub Mackerel Amendment to the Atlantic Mackerel, Squid, and Butterfish Fishery Management Plan. This is an important opportunity for the Mid-Atlantic Council to manage chub mackerel from the start to protect their role in the ecosystem.

"Our duty to the whole, including to the unborn generations, bids us to restrain an unprincipled present-day minority from wasting the heritage of these unborn generations. The movement for the conservation of wildlife and the larger movement for the conservation of all our natural resources are essentially democratic in spirit, purpose and method."

-- Theodore Roosevelt

When the Council passed the Unmanaged Forage Omnibus Amendment last August, it committed to taking a proactive approach to conserving unmanaged forage species and the ecosystem services they provide. In keeping with that commitment, I urge the Council to manage chub mackerel to ensure that its role as forage is maintained and to consider the multiple users who depend on this resource.

"Then I say the Earth belongs to each generation during its course, fully and in its own right, no generation can contract debts greater than may be paid during the course of its own existence."

-- Thomas Jefferson

Along the Atlantic coast, highly migratory species like tuna, billfish, swordfish, and sharks depend on chub as food as they transit our offshore regions. Chub mackerel are also important to other managed species like monkfish, summer flounder, and a variety of marine mammals. This means that while chub mackerel are present worldwide, a healthy and abundant population here at home is critical to our shared marine ecosystems and the coastal economies that depend on their well-being.

"As we peer into society's future, we--you and I, and our government--must avoid the impulse to live only for today, plundering for our own ease and convenience the precious resources of tomorrow. We cannot mortgage the material assets of our grandchildren without risking the loss also of their political and spiritual heritage. We want democracy to survive for all generations to come, not to become the insolvent phantom of tomorrow."

-- Dwight D. Eisenhower

In developing this amendment, the Council should proactively seek input from scientists and economists with expertise in offshore species and their fisheries, commercial and recreational fishermen who depend on highly migratory species, and members of the public. This expertise is necessary to ensure that the council understands any impacts that an increase in catch of chub mackerel could have on predators, fishermen, coastal communities, and the marine ecosystem.

"Every man who appreciates the majesty and beauty of the wilderness and of wild life, should strike hands with the farsighted men who wish to preserve our material resources, in the effort to keep our forests and our game beasts, game-birds, and game-fish--indeed, all the living creatures of prairie and woodland and seashore--from wanton destruction. Above all, we should realize that the effort toward this end is essentially a democratic movement."

-- Theodore Roosevelt

While there is still so much we do not know about this species, we do know these fish are essential forage for valuable commercial and recreational species, fishermen, and coastal communities. I ask that the council consider the full range of management measures, including gear restrictions, seasonal closures, and control dates. The council must use all the best scientific and economic information available when assessing trade-offs between allowing direct catch of chub mackerel and the value of leaving these fish in the water as forage.

"A thing is right when it tends to preserve the integrity, stability, and beauty of the biotic community. It is wrong when it tends otherwise."

-- Aldo Leopold

Comments: I have been involved in bluefin tuna management since the 1970s. I was president of East Coast Tuna Association (ECTA) and the Atlantic Bluefin Tuna Association (ABTA) for many years. ABTA and ECTA were and are the primary trade organizations for the US commercial bluefin tuna hand-gear fishery in the US. I have also served on the US ICCAT Advisory Panel. I am a member of the MAFMC SMB AP and the ASMFC Atlantic Herring AP.

Currently I am also the chairman of CHOIR. The CHOIR Coalition was formed in 2002 by commercial and recreational fishermen to advocate for the responsible development of the Atlantic Herring fishery. CHOIR is the organization that advocates for thousands of individuals and organizations who look to protect the herring resource and the many commercial and recreational interests that depend on a healthy herring resource. Its many members are made up of commercial and recreational fishermen as well as whale watching and other ecotourism businesses. Our membership also includes many shore-side businesses as well. The herring fishery is important but so to are the other fisheries that depend on a healthy herring resource.

It is extremely important that as the MAFMC moves forward with the Chub Mackerel Amendment that it realizes that chub mackerel is an important forage fish for many HMS species and the many HMS fisheries that depend on healthy HMS stocks. The protection of highly migratory fish like tuna and marlin must be included in the goals and objectives of the amendment and in the setting of Optimum Yield for the chub mackerel fishery. The management options should factor in negative impacts on HMS species and existing HMS fisheries both commercial and recreational. The economic value of these fisheries must be calculated and factored into the amendment. There should be an option to cap the chub fishery at historical levels.

Chub Mackerel are an important forage fish for many HMS species and this must be accounted for in to any chub mackerel plan going forward. Now is the time to address all the important forage concerns. Once an expansion of this fishery occurs it will be difficult and painful to reduce it.

Executive Director Chris Moore Mid-Atlantic Fishery Management Council 800 North State Street, Suite 201, Dover, Delaware 19901

RE: Chub Mackerel Amendment Scoping Input

Executive Director Moore:

As a private recreational angler from Maryland, I am pleased to provide the following input regarding the addition of Chub Mackerel as a Stock in the Mackerel, Squid, and Butterfish Fishery Management Plan.

As you know, I served on the MAFMC during the development and finalization of the Forage Amendment. There was special concern during the amendment process regarding the Chub Mackerel. Chub Mackerel are an important prey species for many predators in the Mid-Atlantic region. They play an important role as forage in regional marine ecosystems, moving energy throughout the food web to the larger predators that eat them.

Many well-established recreational, charter, and tournament fisheries have been built on the pursuit of such HMS predators; specifically, marlin, swordfish, tuna, dolphin fish, wahoo, and sharks. It is an abundance of species like chub mackerel, squid, and other forage in the Mid-Atlantic that acts as the foundation of such offshore HMS fisheries, which ultimately generate massive economic benefit and thousands of jobs in many coastal towns. Pilot whales are another important predator that spend much of the summer and early fall in the same areas where chub mackerel abundance is continually noted by many HMS fishermen.

Tournaments also highlight the immense economic value of largely catch and release billfish fisheries to the region. The conservation of billfish species continues to benefit to towns like Ocean City, Maryland, which is proud to host the White Marlin Open, and be considered the White Marlin Capital of the World.

HMS based recreational, charter, and commercial fisheries also provide important access for many to species that are a highly valuable food source for the nation. In contrast, the peak historical catch of the low value of chub mackerel is limited in overall value both as a food source and in overall economic benefit.

I commend the Council for the development of the Ecosystem Approach to Fisheries Management Guidance Document, and appreciate the complexity of shifting away from single species based management action.

Considering such guidance, I encourage the Council to consider and include the following elements when establishing the amendment:

- Provide for a broad range of stakeholder involvement in the amendment process by adding advisors with experience in the operation of, and economics of HMS based fisheries through appropriate advisory panels, FMAT, and SSC discussions.
- -Include the protection of existing HMS based fisheries in the goals and objectives of the amendment, and definition of Optimum Yield for the chub mackerel fishery.
- Include a comprehensive analysis of the economic impact of existing private recreational, charter, and tournament fisheries, including spatial and seasonal effort and benefit.
- Include options that would cap the chub mackerel fishery at historic levels to ensure no negative impacts to existing fisheries.
- Include risks to the existing HMS fisheries in all of the terms of reference for the management of chub mackerel, as well as impacts on other managed and unmanaged species by increased effort and bycatch.
- Ensure a comprehensive suite of management alternatives to mitigate any impacts to existing HMS based fisheries, and potential conflicts with industrial level removals of chub mackerel during periods of peak abundance of predators in the region.

I appreciate the opportunity to comment on this action, and urge the Council to carefully consider the existing ecological balance, and the economic benefit that exists in the region, and may be impacted by an increase in chub mackerel harvest at this time.

Best regards.

Re: Chub Mackerel Scoping Comments

Dear Dr. Moore:

As the council moves forward with an amendment to add tinker mackerel to the Atlantic Mackerel, Squid, Butterfish Fishery Management Plan, I appreciate the opportunity to offer comments on the proposed action and related process. Tinker mackerel are highly important as forage species for blue and white marlin, tunas, mahi, and wahoo throughout the mid-Atlantic region. The recreational and commercial fisheries for these species are well established and highly significant in economic, social, and cultural terms to the region, and yet the management of these fisheries is outside of the council's portfolio. Consequently, I would urge the council to develop a plan to effectively engage the affected constituencies and experts in these fisheries to ensure that the council is appropriately informed regarding the potential consequences and impacts of expanding the tinker fishery as a new, large-scale, directed fishery in the region. The council should anticipate a high potential for conflicts with the region's existing HMS fisheries if the directed tinker fishery is significantly expanded, and these risks should be fully evaluated as the council considers whether to allow any further expansion of this fishery.

The tinker fishery was historically limited to incidental levels of catch in the Illex squid fishery until the recent, unmanaged expansion into directed fishing with industrial-scale trips that occurred without the benefit of any science or management review by the council. This new, directed modality should be considered as a new fishery, and the tinker's candidacy for development should be weighed carefully against the ecological and economic interactions with the region's existing fisheries. Directed trips may result in localized removals in excess of 500,000 LB of tinkers in areas where HMS species and the HMS fleet is located, with the potential for this new mode of directed fishing to adversely disrupt fishing conditions for the predatory species. The recreational HMS fleet in particular is limited in its range, and depends on the presence of forage to concentrate HMS species, making them available to the fishery within range of their respective home ports.

The council should also identify gaps in the current state of the science on interactions between these higher trophic level fisheries within the region. A traditional, single-species assessment or application of data limited methods to such an important forage stock will not put the council in a position to effectively consider the risks or benefits of expanding this fishery. A stomach content study from Cape Hatteras to Cape May conducted throughout the season in the top ports could provide the council with information regarding the spatial and seasonal importance of various forage species to these higher trophic level species in the region within a reasonable timeframe and investment.

The council and its constituents would also benefit from addressing the important institutional gaps related to these fisheries interactions as this amendment moves forward. Specifically, the council's advisory panels would benefit from adding individuals with expertise in the ecology and economics of the region's billfish and tuna fisheries as this amendment is developed. The HMS advisory panel is a repository of expertise in the region's recreational and commercial HMS fisheries and should also be engaged as the amendment's goals and management measures are developed. Similarly, the South Atlantic Fishery Management Council manages dolphin and wahoo throughout their range in the Atlantic and should be consulted as the amendment is developed.

The FMAT and SSC will also be important sources of management and scientific advice as the council develops this amendment. It will be important to have individuals with expertise of these fisheries interactions and economics on the FMAT and SSC as these bodies develop their advice for the council. The potential consequences for higher trophic level predator fisheries should be addressed in the terms of references for scientific advice from stock assessment working groups or contractors and the SSC when the council seeks advice for the management of this fishery. Standard stock assessment or ABC terms of reference will not provide an adequate basis to evaluate these ecological or economic tradeoffs.

The region's recreational fisheries for tunas, billfish, mahi, and wahoo includes private and charter components, and numerous tournaments in the region. The amendment should include a robust description of the economics of these components of the fishery and the commercial fisheries for tuna, mahi, and wahoo.

An earlier (2011) survey by NMFS indicated that HMS anglers spent $76.3 million annually in "durables" (e.g. boats, tackle, other durables), which only begins to describe the capital investment in these existing fisheries that may be placed at risk through this action. The spatial and temporal coincidence of tinkers with these existing, highly valuable fisheries should be described in the amendment and considered before allowing any expansion of directed fishing for tinkers. A fisheries performance report on tinkers and associated HMS species could provide the council with a useful historical description of the seasonal distribution of tinkers and the related fisheries interactions.

The importance of these fisheries interactions should be reflected in the goals and objectives of the amendment, consistent with principals outlined in the council's EAFM Guidance Document. Specifically, the council could consider minimizing and mitigating impacts to the region's existing fisheries for tuna, billfish, mahi, and wahoo as a goal of the amendment, or within an objective function for an Optimum Yield (OY) control rule. Impacts to these existing fisheries for tinker predators can be minimized by maintaining tinker OY within the range of the historical fishery. Since the quota outcome of this process is unknown at this stage in the amendment process, an appropriate suite of mitigation measures should be included in the management alternatives. These could include measures to de-conflict the fisheries, such as seasonal quotas and seasonal trip limits delimiting large-scale, directed fishing to after the fall billfish migration and after the conclusion of the region's HMS tournaments.

Thanks again for the opportunity to comment on the proposed action.

Sincerely,

Richard B. Robins, Ir.

Subject: Chub Mackerel Scoping Comments

Dear Dr. Moore,

Thank you for the opportunity to provide public comment on the Chub Mackerel Amendment to the Atlantic Mackerel, Squid, and Butterfish Fishery Management Plan. This is an important opportunity for the Mid-Atlantic Council to manage chub mackerel from the start to protect their role in the ecosystem.

When the Council passed the Unmanaged Forage Omnibus Amendment last August, it committed to taking a proactive approach to conserving unmanaged forage species and the ecosystem services they provide. In keeping with that commitment, I urge the Council to manage chub mackerel to ensure that its role as forage is maintained and to consider the multiple users who depend on this resource.

Along the Atlantic coast, highly migratory species like tuna, billfish, swordfish, and sharks depend on chub as food as they transit our offshore regions. Chub mackerel are also important to other managed species like monkfish, summer flounder, and a variety of marine mammals. This means that while chub mackerel are present worldwide, a healthy and abundant population here at home is critical to our shared marine ecosystems and the coastal economies that depend on their well-being.

In developing this amendment, the Council should proactively seek input from scientists and economists with expertise in offshore species and their fisheries, commercial and recreational fishermen who depend on highly migratory species, and members of the public. This expertise is necessary to ensure that the council understands any impacts that an increase in catch of chub mackerel could have on predators, fishermen, coastal communities, and the marine ecosystem.

While there is still so much we do not know about this species, we do know these fish are essential forage for valuable commercial and recreational species, fishermen, and coastal communities. I ask that the council consider the full range of management measures, including gear restrictions, seasonal closures, and control dates. The council must use all the best scientific and economic information available when assessing trade-offs between allowing direct catch of chub mackerel and the value of leaving these fish in the water as forage.

Sincerely,

|        |           |              |    |            | Chub mackerel are a species that must be protected in order to support populations in our ecosystem including offshore populations of tuna, billfish, marlin, and striped bass, as well as other species like monkfish, summer flounder, and a variety of marine mammals and sharks. Chub mackerel species populate one of the largest fisheries in the world, providing seafood in Europe, the Mediterranean, the Caribbean, South America, and Asia. Support healthy oceans and protect our marine ecosystem and the economies that depend on them. |

I believe that it is the Mid-Atlantic Council's job on this planet to protect the wild and raised animals alike - fish, birds, mammals, etc. - from abuse or interference in their native natural environments. Animal murder is not part of civilized society, and animal torture for human amusement, financial gain, or so-called "benefit‹s unthinkable. I cannot bear to live in a world without all wild creatures thriving in their place in Nature's chain of life. Our shared marine ecosystem depends on the well-being of the chub mackerel population.

| Christina | Wilgren     | Redford     | ΜΔ | 173        | We need to balance our fishing industry and the long term health of our ecosystem so it is varied and healthy. Over fishing and harmful fishing practices (such as long lines) do more damage in the short and long run. The world depends greatly on the sea for protein. We must act prudently to protect all types of species to have healthy ecosystems and a future filled of with healthy protein. |

I am a retired naval officer and know firsthand the importance of protecting all marine life. I think it is criminal what we have allowed to happen to our oceans, including overfishing, pollution, and such preventable things as oil spills.

It is time to act authoritatively to reverse course on the stupidity of the past and to declare clear plans for protecting marine life, healing the marine environment, and putting the oceans on a path to rejuvenation.

We can do, but we need leadership - leadership from America.

| Thomas    | Talbot    | Anthony     | NM    | 88021 | I may not have written this letter personally, due to time restrictions, but I strongly believe we need to have conservative limits for taking forage fish, which support multitudes of other life forms in oceans. It would be incredibly stupid to continue allowing unlimited numbers of forage fish to be taken, with no regard for the unknown but dangerous results. It only makes sense to be very frugal with forage fish catch, lest we adversely affect the whole world's oceans. |

| We live, now, during the Sixth Mass Extinction. We, Homo sapiens, are one of 8.7 million species who share Earth. All of these species have lived on Earth for millions (some billions) of years longer than us. It is one thing to kill humans, and it is entirely another to endanger all life on Earth.
